U. S. to Build 'Finest' Liner To Retrieve Ocean Trade

Leviathan's Successor to Be Smaller Than Foreign Giants.

Safety, Comfort Will Be Stressed

Maritime Commission to Direct Subsidized Construction.

By William V. Nessly.

The "finest and safest ship on the seas," a liner that will enable the United States to take its place again in the race for ocean travel supremacy, is to be built under direction of the United States Maritime Commission, it was announced yesterday.

Proposing a vessel of its own design, the commission, through Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman, began its drive for building up of the American Merchant Marine by calling for bids on a twin screw, combination mail, passenger and cargo liner that "will enable American shipping to compete more successfully with the new foreign-flag vessels for the rich North Atlantic traffic."

While by no mean rivaling in size the tremendous British ship, the Queen Mary, or the French floating palace, the Normandie, the new American vessel will be the most modern it is possible to construct, with all known measures of safety and "with unexcelled accommodations for both passengers and crew," the commission said.

The new ship will be built under the construction differential subsidy provisions of the Merchant Marine act, by which the Government provides a subsidy to cover the difference in cost of construction here and what it would be abroad.

The liner is intended to replace the giant Leviathan, formerly the German ship Vaterland, which was seized by the United States during the World War and used as a troop ship. The Leviathan was laid up in 1935 at Hoboken, N. J., following representations by the United States Lines Co., which operated it after the war, that because of its age the vessel was too expensive to operate in competition with modern foreign-flag ships in the transatlantic service. In return for the Government's consent to the retirement of the old liner, the company agreed to build a replacement vessel of the type of the popular and successful liners, the Manhattan and the Washington.

723 Feet Long.

Although it will be a companion ship of the Manhattan and the Washington, the commission said, the new vessel will be larger than those ships. It will be 723 feet in length, with a breadth of 92 feet, a depth to promenade deck of 75 feet, a load-draft displacement of about 34,000 tons, and a speed of approximately 22 knots. There will be accommodations for about 1,200 passengers and a crew of about 630.

Bids for the new liner, to be opened here on September 15, were invited on both a fixed sum basis, and an adjusted price basis, the latter to be subject to adjustment on account of changes in the cost of labor and materials, providing any resultant increase does not exceed 15 per cent. The ship must be completed within two years and four months.

The design for the ship was prepared by the commission's architects and experts after weeks of conferences and consultations with the United States Lines Co., the different shipbuilders in a position to bid on a ship of such size, and the American Bureau of Shipping and their architects, engineers and technical advisers.

The commission statement said: "All of the latest safety devices have been incorporated in the de-

Officer Killed, D. C. Flier Hurt In Md. Crash

Flight Surgeon Burns to Death as Plane Hits Tree.

An Army plane piloted by William R. Enyart, of 3124 Thirty-eighth street northwest, secretary of the National Aeronautical Association, struck a tree and crashed near Fort Hoyle, Md., yesterday, killing a passenger, Maj. Guy Hart Moates, a reserve officer from Tarentum, Pa., as his son looked on.

Enyart, a lieutenant in the Army Air Corps Reserve, either jumped from the plane or was thrown clear. Brought to Walter Reed Hospital here in an ambulance, he was suffering from a broken jaw, burns on the body and a possible chest injury. He was expected to recover.

The two men—Maj. Moates is a flight surgeon in the Air Corps Reserve—were undergoing two weeks' training at Langley Field, Va.

They had flown from Langley to Fort Hoyle to see Maj. Moates' 19-year-old son, Guy, jr., who is enrolled in the Citizens Military Training Camp there. The crash came a few moments after the visit ended.

Maj. Moates waved to his son just as Lieut. Enyart started the plane for the take-off. Leaving the ground, the plane clipped a tree and branches caught in the tail. Then it cleared another tree and soared over a woods.

Those on the ground thought it was safely on its way for the return trip ot Langley Field. Then they saw it bank sharply and then crash to the ground. Apparently the rudder had jammed.

Witnesses, according to an Associated Press dispatch, said the plane's motor sputtered when Lieut. Enyart warmed it up. Branches of the tree which caught in the tail piece, are believed to have jammed the rudder, causing the plane to fall. The plane burst into flames immediately it hit the ground, but Enyart was far enough away so that he could be pulled to safety.

The plane was demolished. Rescuers could not get near it because of the gasoline-fed flames.

Maj. Moates' son was among the C. M. T. C. boys who ran to the scene.

Enyart, now in his thirties, is an outstanding authority on American aviation, and, for that matter, world aviation. In March he returned here from a tour of Europe and revealed that European powers, engaged in an arms race, would have 45,000 war planes by the end of the year.

Mrs. Kitty Enyart and their child have been vacationing at Kitty Hawk, N. C., scene of the first successful flight of the Wright brothers.

Enyart is a graduate of the University of Illinois, where he received a bachelor degree in the school of engineering.

With Maj. Moates he had flown the Army attack plane to Bolling Field, thence to Columbus, Ohio, and from there to Fort Hoyle. A board of inquiry was appointed at Langley Field last night to investigate the crash.

Thousands See Flier Die.

New Rochelle, Aug. 1 (AP).—Several thousand visitors saw a small seaplane flown by Charles Yager, 30, plunge into Long Island Sound off Fort Slocum Island. Two hours later boats manned by police and soldiers from Fort Slocum recovered the crumpled plane from 30 feet of water, but the pilot's body was not inside.

Shaft Dedicated at Montfaucon To U. S. Soldiers Slain in Battle

Roosevelt and President Le Brun, of France, Pledge Nations to Work for Peace; Ceremony Is Attended by 6,000.

By the Associated Press.

Montafaucon, France, Aug. 1.—America's greatest war memorial in France, commemorating the victory of the American first army in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, was dedicated on the soil of Lorraine, where thousands of doughboys died in the closing week of the World War.

President Roosevelt, his voice carried by radio from a yacht on the Potomac River to the Montfaucon battlefield, pledged the United States to continued faith in the ideal of democracy, common to France and the United States.

At Montfaucon President Albert Le Brun, of France; Gen. John J. Pershing commander of the American expeditionary forces, and Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, France's war-time leader on the Western front, dedicated their nations to continued friendship and the quest of peace.

Six thousand Americans and Frenchmen attended the ceremonies at the memorial, a tall white shaft of granite, designed by John Russell Oppe, of New York. Rising from a hilltop, it dominates the surrounding country like a lighthouse. Nearby are the ruins of the church and old village of Montfaucon, destroyed in the last days of September, 1918, when the American Army was going through its grimmest test of the great war. The new village of Montfaucon is visible in the distance.

President Roosevelt stressed the

Congress Given Three Weeks to Enact Program

Leaders to Speed Session and Finish All Work Before Adjourning.

By Sidney Olson.

Invigorated by victory in the Senate on the wages-hours bill, Congressional leaders last night predicted adjournment in three weeks after enactment of all of the President's remaining program.

The new strategy appeared to be a speed up of the Congressional saunter to a bouncing jog trot, with the wages-hours bill, new sugar legislation, a loophole-plugging tax law, a housing bill and the substitute court bill to come successfully out of the procedure.

Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, majority leader in the House, joined other legislative chieftains last night in predicting swift passage of the Administration's program in three weeks or less.

Blocs Prevent Stampede.

Numerous obstacles, some of them of threatening size, admittedly make the adjournment road no primrose path, but unexpectedly, the leaders can count on several blocs with special interests to side with them in battling an adjournment stampede. Further, an important group of Democrats in both Houses, fearing a reaction in their home States if adjournment comes without enactment of any important legislation, privately have vowed to stay on until this minimum five-point program is made law.

Key figure in the present situation is Representative Mary Norton (Democrat) New Jersey, the new chairman of the House Labor Committee, who angrily denied last week rumors she was "sabotaging and delaying" the wages-hours bill in committee, although admitting she thought the bill might be "strengthened" by going over to January.

Mrs. Norton left town over the week-end for a visit on "important business," to the expressed chagrin of committee members, who hoped to complete the bill Monday.

Work While They Wait.

Rayburn said last night the bill would get an immediate "green light," thus reaching the floor by the following Monday, August 9. In the meantime it was indicated that a sugar bill and other measures would be "mopped up" ahead of it.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, head of the joint Congressional tax investigating committee, said yesterday he believes the committee can ready a bill to plug tax loopholes exposed in the recent investigation by the middle of next week. After one or two days of hearings the bill will be shot to the floor of the

11-Cent Milk Will Continue, Dairyman Says

Highland Farms Deliveries Interstate Commerce, Head Contends.

The Highland Farms Dairy will continue to deliver its milk to Arlington and Alexandria customers at 11 cents a quart despite an injunction served on the firm yesterday by the Virginia Milk Commission, according to C. Y. Stephens, president of the company.

The commission, which was granted the restraining order by Judge Frank T. Sutton, of the Richmond law and equity court, claims the dairy is violating the minimum of 14 cents a quart which it has set for the sale of milk in Arlington-Alexandria area.

"We're not selling milk in Virginia," Stephens told The Post yesterday. "We're delivering it to our customers in Arlington and Alexandria by written order only. It's interstate commerce."

Last night Stephens had not seen a copy of the injunction, which was served early yesterday morning on Vernon Steele, a company deliveryman.

The 700 Virginia customers of the dairy mail their orders to its Washington office, 1615 First street northwest, on blanks furnished by the company, officials said. In most cases they pay in advance by purchasing milk tickets from the dairymen. Less often delivery is on a C. O. D. basis.

Celler Opens Drive on Gain And Loss Tax

Calls on Morgenthau to Lead in Fight for Levy's Repeal.

Terms Law Impotent in Raising Revenue and Handicap to Trade.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A determined battle for repeal of the Federal capital gains and losses tax is in prospect for the next session of Congress when an effort will be made to recast the Federal tax structure along more equitable and efficient lines.

For more than a decade the capital gains and losses tax has been one of the most unsatisfactory levies imposed by the Federal Government. As a revenue raiser it has been unsatisfactory because of its instability and it has generally been regarded as unsatisfactory from a business viewpoint.

Prior to the depression, this tax brought huge sums into the Treasury as stockholders realized large profits on their shares. With the advent of the depression and the sharp decline in security values, the provisions of this tax materially aided the downward spiral of Treasury revenue as security losses were offset against income by thousands of persons.

Called Unjust Burden.

Since the depth of the depression, the provisions of this tax have been drastically revised so that now practically no allowance is permitted for security losses, except as offset against profits from sales of capital assets. But the present law is held to work an unjust burden on security holders.

At the same time, it is contended in some quarters that the existence of the capital gains tax contributes to violent fluctuations in security prices. When such prices are going up, holders of securities are reluctant to sell—since the longer a security is held the smaller is the tax on the profit—and thus through a drying up of the supply, a further upward impetus is given to prices. On the other hand, it is contended, many wealthy and moderately well-off investors will sell securities on a falling market in order to establish losses to offset against previous gains—thus giving acceleration to the downward movement of prices.

The latest crusader on Capitol Hill against the capital gains and losses tax is Representative Emanuel Celler (Democrat), New York. He recently introduced a bill in the House providing for repeal of the levy, and yesterday made public a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, calling on him to take the initiative in proposing repeal of the tax.

Handicap to Recovery.

Secretary Morgenthau is on a vacation in the Hawaiian Islands, and thus will not be able to reply to Celler's letter for a month or so. Furthermore, the Treasury is now engaged in a comprehensive study of the entire Federal tax structure preparatory to making recommendations to the President and Congress later this year. The purpose is to determine to what extent the Federal tax structure should be overhauled.

Celler's letter to Secretary Morgenthau undoubtedly will be considered by the experts conducting that study. The New York Democrat contended that the capital gains and losses tax has been "impotent" as a revenue producer and

Youth Pays His All For Air Ride, Then Plunges to Death

Indianapolis, Aug. 1 (AP).—A young man identified through the Civilian Conservation Corps as Regis Schwer, of Muncie, leaped 1,000 feet to his death from an airplane here today.

Schwer went to the municipal airport and was taken for a ride over the city, although he lacked 14 cents of having the $1.50 fare.

Pilot Ledger Reed said that shortly after he left the airport his passenger climbed out of the cockpit. Reed attempted to pull him back but failed, and when the young man climbed out on the wing, Reed threw the plane into a steep bank in a vain effort to keep him there.

A note in the man's clothing said he "couldn't stand living any longer."

Kansas to Decide if 3.2 Beer, Legally Harmless, Has 'Kick'

By the Associated Press.

Wichita, Kans., Aug. 1.—The question whether a man can become illegally drunk on a beverage legally non-intoxicating in Kansas was raised today for decision by the State's higher courts.

The issue was brought up by John Madden, jr., attorney for William Leifheit, charged with driving while intoxicated at the time his truck figured in a collision.

Leifheit and defense witnesses testified he had drunk nothing but 3.2 per cent beer, declared non-intoxicating by an act of the last Legislature.

"Leifheit could have drunk three gallons of a beverage of less than 3.2 per cent alcoholic content and still not be held as drunk," Madden told the court.

Judge C. Edward Murray said he could not follow Madden's reasoning, overruled his argument, and allowed the trial to proceed.

Both Madden and the judge indicated the issue would reach the Supreme Court.

The jury, which received the case yesterday, was allowed to go home for the week-end when it failed to reach a verdict last night after several hours. Deliberation will be resumed tomorrow.

Highway patrolmen testified Leifheit was drunk when they reached the scene of the accident. Leifheit admitted he drank 3.2 beer but said he was in full command of his faculties. Defense witnesses said he was sober.

At Topeka Attorney General Clarence V. Beck, commenting on the case, said, "It's the result, not the cause, that's to be taken into account. If a man's intoxicated, he's intoxicated, no matter what he drank."

30,000 Japanese Mass To Stop Chiang's Host; Decisive Battle Nears

China Will Win, Chiang's Wife Tells Women in Plea for Unity

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Nanking (Monday), Aug. 2.—Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, her dark eyes flashing defiantly, said today that China "will fight and win" her undeclared war with Japan.

The American-educated wife of China's dictator said on behalf of the nation's women that a state of war against the "foreign invaders" exists and predicted a victory for China's arms.

Her declaration that "this is wartime" was made in a stirring appeal to the women of China to support their husbands, sons and sweethearts at the front. An auditorium crowded by women and girls approved the first lady's program for a "society to comfort and support the nation's defenders."

"If the country's women are behind the government and the army—and today's meeting afforded ample proof they are—our cause certainly will be victorious," she declared in an interview after the meeting of the Moral Endeavor Association.

"We Chinese are prone to argue and quibble sometimes over relatively unimportant things, but today there is no argument. The spirit of the Chinese women now is the spirit that wins wars."

She expressed pride in the coun-

French in Tientsin Receive Apologies

Nipponese 'Regret' Incident, Permit Paris' Troops to Pass.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Tientsin (Monday), Aug. 2.—More than 30,000 veteran Japanese troops, including some of the most highly mechanized regiments of the famous Kwantung army, were massed in the Fengtailukouchiao area southwest of Peiping today ready to start a major attack on five divisions of the Chinese Central Government's soldiers.

Japanese warplanes dropped leaflets around Tientsin announcing they would bomb the entire area if Japanese communication lines were cut or there was any other anti-Japanese action.

The Chinese were estimated to number about 100,000 including remnants of the twenty-ninth division and other units driven from the Peiping-Tientsin area by the Japanese. Chiang Kai-shek's divisions, totalling about 60,000, are German trained and equipped with modern weapons.

Both sides are well supplied with airplanes.

Clash Seen in 48 Hours.

Chinese believed that scouting parties of both sides might clash within 48 hours, and that major units would be engaged "in a decisive battle within three days."

The action of the Chinese in advancing northward during the week-end was said to have caused the Japanese high command to decide to carry out immediately its threat to "drive all hostile soldiery south of the Yellow River.

The Japanese-French situation eased when Lieut. Gen. Kiyoshi, Katsuki, Japanese commander, apologized to the French commander for obstructing his communication lines. The situation had grown serious following the wounding of the two French soldiers when Japanese held up French military trucks on the international bridge, over which the French claim jurisdiction, and the French retaliated by threatening to fire on Japanese trucks if they tried to cross the bridge.

French soldiers and equipment are now passing freely across the bridge.

Mopping-up Pushed.

French newspapermen said their embassy had protested to the Japanese against the disarming and wounding of two French infantrymen who were in a detachment on guard duty near the East Station. They said a Japanese patrol approached the Frenchmen and started to disarm them. The French broke away and barricaded themselves in a store room and the Japanese opened fire. A French sergeant was wounded gravely and a soldier slightly. The Japanese withdrew when French reinforcements arrived from the French concession.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 1.—Insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco's veteran eastern army today thrust a widening wedge into vital territory near the junction of Teruel, Cuenca and Valencia Provinces, roughly 100 miles east of Madrid.

The insurgents claimed further important gains in that sector, where for months they have been trying to interpose a barrier between Madrid and the temporary seat of the government at Valencia.

Today their communique announced that the conquests south of Albarracin had been speeded up and four villages captured.

It said the central insurgent column, moving down the main road from Terriente, had taken Toril, Masegoso and Arroyo Frio. The left wing, marching from Saldon, had captured Valdecuenca. These towns are in southern Teruel Province and their capture, representing gains of several miles, considerably widens the dangerous salient the insurgents have held at Teruel. The move brings the insurgents close to the border of Valencia Province.

Meanwhile the insurgent right wing was reported making good progress in Cuenca Province. The government's "iron column," which had been defending this sector, was reported fleeing toward Valencia.

"The enemy was put to complete rout," said the insurgent communique, "while our troops were advancing with minimum losses."

Numerous bands of government militiamen which had held positions in the Universales Mountains between Tereul and Cuenca Provinces were reported stumbling into the insurgent lines and surrendering.

The insurgent communique reported only artillery action on the Madrid and Granada fronts and all quiet along the northern coast.

Dispatches from Madrid reported that a heavy insurgent attack in the Usera sector, southeast of Madrid, had been thrown back by government machine gunners and dynamiters after two hours of fighting.

Baseball Fan Here Overcome by Heat; Warmer Forecast

John G. Forman, 49, of Roanoke, Va., collapsed yesterday while watching the ball game at Griffith Stadium. Heat aggravating a brain ailment was the cause, Dr. W. G. Fletcher, of Casualty Hospital, said.

Forman was taken to the clubhouse, and later to Casualty. After treating him for cerebral anemia superinduced by the heat, Dr. Fletcher allowed Forman to return to his home.

Forman's collapse came in the hottest part of the day, when the thermometer at the Weather Bureau was hovering around 85, the peak temperature reached at 3 p. m.

Official forecast for today was "fair and slightly warmer," but there was no indicatoin of a return to the heat wave which gripped the Capital for eight days during July.

Despite the relatively cool weather of recent days, officials at the Weather Bureau said that temperatures have been running close to the range which they normally cover during this period.

Moscow Seizes Bishop, Priests In Fascist Plot

30 Accused of Conspiracy to Crush Soviets, Restore Church.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Aug. 1.—Thirty persons, including a bishop and 12 priests, are under arrest on charges of enlisting worshipers around Orel in a "Fascist, counter-revolutionary" plot to restore power of the orthodox church and overthrow the Soviet regime, the atheist magazine Bezboznik said today.

The prisoners were arrested in April and May and presumably are awaiting trial. Nothing was said about their conviction.

Bishop Inokenty Nikeforoff; the Archpriest Voskresensky, well-known debater with atheists on religious subjects, and two priests of their church in Orel were described as leaders of the plot.

Other defendants are three monks, two former nuns, a former prince, three one-time landlords and eight other men who once owned property.

Under cover of the constitutional provision for freedom of religious worship, the magazine said, the defendants sought to rally reactionaries around the orthodox church and to stir widespread insurrection among the clergy.

They were accused of educating children in an "anti-Soviet spirit" and of enlisting believers in a plot to overthrow the Soviet regime.

Nikeforoff was charged with writing an anti-Soviet prayer, which he had read to his church, and of sending exiled priests to villages to carry on counter-revolutionary work among collective farmers.

The priests were charged with asking their parishioners to resist measures of the Communist Party and the Soviet government.

Normandy Spans Atlantic in 95 Hrs., Sets New Record

New York (Monday), Aug. 2 (AP). The French liner Normandie arrived off Ambrose Light early today with what Capt. Pierre Thoreux radioed was a new record for the east to west crossing of the Atlantic—3 days, 23 hours, and 2 minutes from Bishops Rock, England.

French line officials said the crossing bettered the old mark of 4 days, 6 minutes, and 23 seconds set by the Normandie on March 22. During one day of the crossing, Capt. Thoreux radioed, the Normandie steamed 781 miles, an average of 31.24 knots.

Sibenik, Yugoslavia, Aug. 1 (U.P.). Premier Milan Stoyadinovitch, embroiled with the Greek Orthodox Church over a government concordat with the Vatican, warned the church tonight to keep out of politics.

The statement was interpreted as a pronouncement that the government would continue to press for ratification of the concordat by the Senate despite widespread opposition from Greek Catholics. The Skupshtina or lower house of Parliament, already has passed the bill.

Byrd Renews Waste Charges In RE Projects

By the Associated Press.

Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, resumed yesterday his charges of "waste and extravagance" in the Resettlement Administration with disclosure of an audit by the General Accounting Office, showing the per unit cost of the Shenandoah homesteads project in Virginia as $7,909.35.

The per unit cost of the Shenandoah project was the subject of dispute between Byrd and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace after Byrd unavailingly asked Wallace to abandon the project in the interest of economy.

"Fortunately," Byrd commented in a statement yesterday, "the General Accounting Office still is an independent branch of the United States Government, responsible only to Congress. So long as this condition continues the members of Congress and the people in general can rely on reports presented by this department with full confidence of their accuracy and unbiased preparation."

Its Fate in Balance.

"As to how long the General Accounting Office will remain an independent branch depends on the action Congress will take on the recommendation made by the President's committee on reorganization, which is to the effect that the present independent status of this office shall be destroyed to the extent that all pre-auditing shall be under the control of the executive branch of the Government.

"The fact that I have received contradictory reports from the Resettlement Administration and the General Accounting Office strengthens my belief that the independence of this office should not be impaired by the passage of the legislation now pending."

Byrd recalled that his original estimate of cost of the Shenandoah project was $1,500,000, with an average per unit cost of six to eight thousand dollars.

Four Rooms Cost $7,909.

"Mr. Wallace replied and said the cost would be $993,000 and that the new units would cost no more than $3,755," he said.

"My original statement was based on the construction of 250 home units. By reason of the inability, I assume, to obtain tenants, this number has now been reduced to 175. The General Accounting Office reports that after a thorough audit of expenditures and allotments as of July 19, the cost will be $1,384,-136.81, and that the average cost per home unit will be $7,909.35."

Byrd said he had discovered in his investigation another sum of $750,000, in the hands of the FERA, available for providing homes for the same mountain people. He said this sum is being expended by the State Welfare Department, which is purchasing small farms on the basis of approximately $800 per family.

Byrd said he had received from a responsible contractor an offer to reproduce the four-room houses at Ida Valley for $900 each, including plumbing and wiring.

Gladiolus Exhibit To Open Thursday

The fourteenth gladiolus and summer flowers show of the Takoma Park Horticultural Club will be held Thursday and Friday at the Takoma Branch of the Public Library, Fifth and Cedar streets, from 7:30 to 10 p. m. on Thursday and 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Friday.

A collection of garden flowers in water color by Mrs. Fred Keplinger, who has exhibited them in the Corcoran Art Gallery, will be a feature of the show.

Miss Marporie Anderson, chairman of the show, is being assisted by John T. Gable, Mrs. Henry Ewing, Mrs. Amelia Burroughs, Miss Marian Scott, Nolan I. Gibson, Paul W. Burk, H. B. Hartung, Miss Catherine Menke and M. J. Goss.

Soviet Will Pension 50,000 Office Workers

Moscow, Aug. 1 (AP).—Fifty thousand office workers will become eligible at once for old-age pensions, the government announced today, under a new decree extending old age and disability benefits prevously enjoyed only by industrial and agricultural employes.

The new white collar beneficiaries will receive 50 to 60 per cent of their present wages, pensions beginning at 60 for men and at 55 for women after 25 years' service.

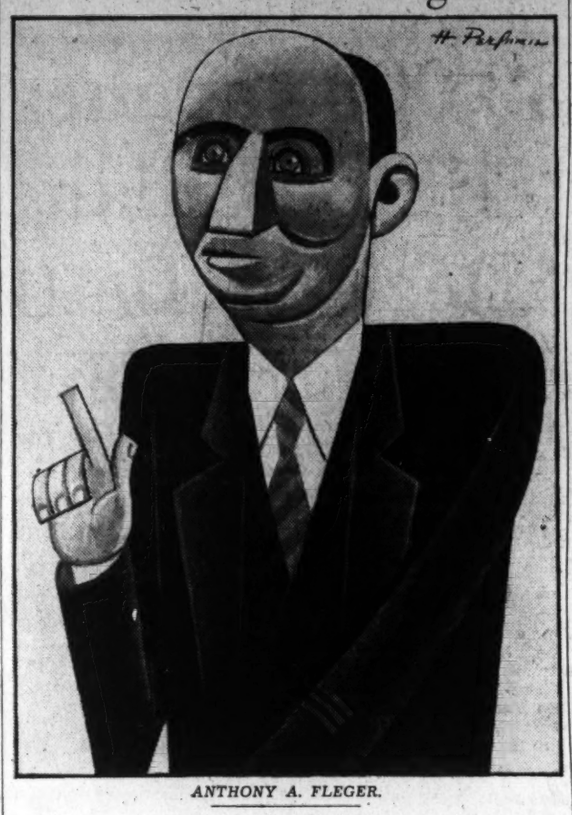
Congress Too Weary to Work, Is Belief of Ohio Legislator



ANTHONY A. FLEGER.

Fleger, First Democrat Elected in G. O. P. Stronghold, Feels Members Not in Right Frame of Mind to Study Important Measures.

Congressmen, weary after seven consecutive months in the harness (so they would have you believe), are not in the "proper frame of mind" to pass pending legislation, Anthony A. Fleger, Democratic Representative from Ohio, believes.

"The bills before Congress now are of sufficient import to warrant time and study before enacting them into law," he said. "But time and study, alas, are two virtues alien to the mood of the lawmakers now."

Not that the 36-year-old legislator is opposed to the Black-Connery wage-hour bill. He will back it even if it comes up for a speedy vote. But he believes there should be plenty of time for discussion.

No New Dealer, but "a Democrat," Fleger nevertheless advocates all measures pertaining to the "general welfare" of the American people. And though he always supported labor legislation, he refuses to carry a torch for any group "in the future as I have in the past."

Biographical note—He was born October 21, 1900; was educated in public and parochial schools and graduated from the John Marshall School of Law in 1926. Has practiced law ever since. He served as justice of the peace in Parma, Ohio, for ten years, then was elected a member of the Ohio State House of Representatives in 1932. He resigned from the Legislature after serving a year to run for Mayor of Parma. Was elected and thus became the first Democratic "his honor." Opposed by the regular Democratic machine in the primary election, he won out with the support of the Townsendites and Father Coughlin. In November he became the first Democrat ever elected from the Twenty-second District to Congress.

U.S. Group Calls Holy Land Split Unjust, Illegal

Christian Conference Sends Protest to League Mandates Commission.

Protests against the British plan to partition Palestine into sovereign Jewish and Arab states and against the "persecution of Jews that now disgraces and degrades Germany, Poland and Rumania" were made yesterday to the mandates commission of the League of Nations by the American Christian Conference on the Jewish problem.

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York City, is honorary chairman of the conference, which sent the following cable to Geneva:

Palestine Natural Refuge.

"We protest against the persecution of Jews that now disgraces and degrades Germany, Poland and Rumania. If Christian people in those countries are unable to stop these horrors and to bring about a condition in which shall be recognized the fundamental rights of all men equally to live their lives irrespective of religious belief or racial origin, then we declare our conviction that the first business of civilized communities is to remove as quickly as possible the victims of this barbarism and to help them reach a land where their lives and inalienable rights may be reasonably secure.

Want Bars Let Down.

"We therefore call upon the British government to fulfill its covenanted pledges to the Jewish people and to the world. We weel it should cease obstructing Jewish settlement in accordance with its promises when it assumed the Palestine mandate.

"We believe we speak the profound conviction of Christian America when we urge the British government to rescind its illegal, unjust and indefensible partition of Palestine—that Transjordania shall be restored to its proper place as part of Palestine territory, that Transjordania shall be thrown open to Jewish settlement, and that there be remvoed all restrictions upon Jewish immigration to all parts of Palestine.

"We believe the problem of the Jews should be the problem of the civilized world, and we call upon our Christian brothers everywhere to assist us in bringing to an end the persecution of and terrible injustice toward the Jews that belie the very heart of the teachings of the founder of our faith."

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcpal Church, is chairman of the conference. The resolution was signed in the presence of more than 250 conference members, Secretary J. Williston Palmer said.

Zion Congress To Discuss Plan For Holy Land

Partition Scheme Will Be Chief Topic at Parley in Switzerland.

By the Associated Press.

Zurich, Switzerland, Aug. 1.—The British proposal for partition of Palestine will be the chief concern of the twentieth Biennial World Zionist Congress, which opens here Tuesday.

Leaders assembling tonight indicated the session would be the most important meeting of Jews in many years, with the future of the Jewish national home under anxious discussion.

The British scheme, which would divide Palestine into a Jewish state, an Arab state and a British mandate, now is under consideration by the League of Nations Permanent Mandates Commission.

More than 500 delegates from 50 countries were expected to attend the congress, which will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the world Zionist organization.

Wise Heads U. S. Group.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York, headed the United States delegation of 90. The largest single delegation was expected to be one of 124 delegates from Palestine.

Observers said opposition to the royal commission proposal was divided into two groups—those who oppose partition on any terms and those who disagree with the commission's method of dividing the territory.

Jewish leaders believed the congress and the royal commission report marked the beginning of a new chapter in the history of Jewish striving for a national home.

Herzl to Be Honored.

The first period started, they said, when Theodor Herzl, a Viennese journalist, called the first world Zionist congress in 1897 after the Dreyfus case in France stirred anti-semitic sentiment.

The beginning of the second period was seen in the Balfour declaration of 1917, which pledged Great Britain to promote a Jewish national home in Palestine.

On August 8 Herzl will be honored in special services at Basle to mark the fortieth anniversary of his first congress.

Congress delegates included representatives of the parties composing the Zionist organization, the labor party, the general Zionists, the Mizrachi, the women's Hadassah, and the Jewish state party.

common democratic aims of the two countries.

"Though the seas divide us," he said, "the people of France and the people of the United States find union today in common devotion to the ideal which the memorial at Montfaucon symbolizes. That ideal, to which both nations bear faithful witness, is the ideal of fredom under democracy—liberty attained by government founded in democratic institutions.

"In a real sense this monument, which we have reared on the French hillside to commemorate the victory of our First Army in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, symbolizes that devotion.

"Today we reaffirm our faith in the democratic ideal. It was in defense of that ideal that we entered the great war 20 years ago. In the Meuse-Argonne, we fought as champions of the rights of mankind. Neither France nor the United States sought or seeks conquest—neither had nor has imperial designs. Both desire to live at peace with all nations. Both seek kinship with lovers of liberty wherever they are found.

"France is carrying on in the tradition of a great civilization, a civilization with which our own culture has had full communion from our very beginnings as a nation. We, of this country, have not forgotten nor could we ever forget the aid given us by France in the dark days of the American Revolution.

Lauds French Culture.

"Our historic friendship finds apt expression in the quotation from a letter which Washington wrote to Rochambeau, and which is inscribed on the base of the monument to the great Frenchman: 'We have been contemporaries and fellow laborers in the cause of liberty, and we have lived together as brothers should do, in harmonious friendship.'

"Many things have gone into the making of the France which we revere and with whose culture we find ourselves in close communion. All of the past speaks to us in the living present, and out of the shadows of a thousand years emerge the glory and the achievement which are France.

"These things we remember today, nor do we forget the living France: the green fields around Montfaucon, with broad farms and contented dwellers on the soil; the villages and cities with their artists and artisans—all these make and preserve the France we hail today.

"To the preservation of this civilization American soldiers and sailors contributed their lives and lie buried on this and other battlefields. They died brothers in arms with Frenchmen. And in their passing America and France gained deeper devotion to the ideals of democracy.

"In their name, for their sake, I pray God no hazard of the future may ever dissipate or destroy that common ideal. I greet the Republic of France, firm in the confidence that a friendship as old as the American Nation will never be sufficient to grow less."

President le Brun, speaking immediately after President Roosevelt, said his words "brought forth emotion hard to control."

"He spoke words of reason whose echo will go far beyond those to whom they were destined," Le Brun declared.

"France here today publicly renews her gratitude to America on the site of her great victory."

Gen. Pershing declared that the Meuse Argonne campaign, in which 1,000,000 Americans were in action, was "fiercer and more heart-breaking" than any World War battle except Verdun.

"It is memories such as these that make civilized soldiers hate war, and they do hate it," he declared. "The last conflict brought no profit to anyone, but left many questions unsettled. But they cannot be settled by war. Yet the prospects for peace do not look promising.

Civilization Threatened.

"Hatred and suspicion still exist and armaments at enormous cost continue to grow. And if no cure is discovered for this temporary madness we are in a hopeless state. For one thing we may be certain, and that is, if another war takes place western civilization as we know it cannot survive."

United States Ambassador William C. Bullitt, who introduced the speakers, declared that American soldiers who died in France "laid on us the inescapable obligation to carry their hope for peace to victory."

Marshal Petain expressed the hope that "Franco-American friendship, sealed in 1781 and 1918 on the battlefields of Virginia (Yorktown) and Lorraine, will grow stronger for the greater promotion of peace."

Americans attending the dedication included Josephus Daniels, wartime Secretary of the Navy and now Ambassador to Mexico; Gov. Robert E. Quinn, of Rhode Island, and Mrs. Quinn; Benedict Crowell, of Cleveland, Ohio, wartime Assistant Secretary of State; Representatives Charles A. Eaton, of New Jersey; Lister Hill, of Alabama, and J. Walter Lambeth, of North Carolina; Harry W. Colmery, national commander of the American Legion, and Brig. Gen. Bernard W. Kearney, national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Celler Assails Capital Gains And Losses Tax

has discouraged economic recovery. He said that after consulting "scores of experts, manufacturers, merchants and other taxpayers" he had concluded there "seems to be universal condemnation" of the tax.

Celler outlined ten objections to the tax, as follows:

"1. The present capital gains tax does not distinguish between capital and income. Capital is the stock from which income flows. We should tax the flow but not the stock, lest we be like the farmer who was not content with the fruit of the tree and cut the limbs off the tree, in the vain hope of getting more fruit and more income. He soon realized that his cupidity destroyed the tree. Our misguided enthusiasm for more income regardless of effect upon the source of income has brought us beyond the point of diminishing returns if not to the point of well nigh killing the goose that lays the golden egg.

Capital Losses Ignored.

"2. Net capital gains are considered as part of taxable income, but net capital losses are not considered at all. This strikes me as being a pretty poor policy. It is essentially one of 'heads you win, tails I lose' type of legislation.

"3. The present capital gains tax constitutes a barrier to a more complete recovery and is an ever present danger to the prosperity of our people. It interferes with normal business transactions and accentuates the fluctuations of the business cycle. It helps produce bigger booms and deeper depressions. At a time like this when we are speeding our ship of state forward we should not drag along this anchor.

"4. This short-sighted tax forces capital to lie idle. It restricts and hinders both individuals and corporations from selling capital assets and transferring their funds to more productive enterprise. It is especially harmful in that it keeps capital funds out of new enterprises. Why start a new business when any gains made will be taxed, but no allowances made for any losses?

Retards Money Circulation.

"5. It retards the circulation of money, and slows down business. Of course this means that less laborers are employed and less goods are produced for everybody. This is certainly contrary to the Administration's basic program of a 'more abundant life.'

"6. The tax on capital gains makes our already confused corporation structures more top-heavy. It encourages corporations to perpetuate holding companies and subsidiary corporations that might otherwise be dissolved. Who wants to pay for the privilege of reforming corporation set-ups?

"7. Many times capital gains are the result of inflation, changes in the price level, or the reduced purchasing power of the dollar. To tax such capital gains is adding insult to injury. Not only do we fail to stabilize the price level, but we tax the people on the result of our failure.

"8. The tax often 'soaks the poor' and is inconsistent with the principle of 'ability to pay.' It usually falls on the weak and poor, who are compelled to part with their capital assets. The rich and strong pay little or no tax, since they are not forced to sell or realize their gains. This tax strikes a sour note and is out of harmony with the Government's fundamental aims and ideals.

"9. This tax is the soure of most of our trouble with the income tax. Its removal would cut down tax avoidance. Unreasonable provisions lead to the use of unreasonable methods to avoid the tax. You can never have fair play if the umpire is prejudiced in favor of the Government.

"10. As a revenue producer the capital gains tax leaves much to be desired. It has led to great fluctuations in our revenue receipts. It promotes a fiscal feast in times of abundance and causes a fiscal famine in times of depression. Over a period of years its returns have proved a disappointment. The general improvement in business that would follow the repeal of these provisions would create more taxable revenue. The increased yield from the transfer taxes from the ordinary provisions of the income tax and from other sources would more than compensate any possible loss sustained by the Treasury due to the repeal of the tax."

In concluding his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, Celler pointed out that "no other great world power taxes capital gains the way we do." He expressed gratification that Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill has "expressed his dissatisfaction of the present capital gains and losses provisions."

Foreign Gold Flood to U. S. Slowing Down

By the Associated Press.

The huge, three-year inflow of foreign gold is slowing down.

With the world's biggest board resting securely in Government vaults, Treasury reports showed today that net imports have averaged only $4,100,000 a day since July 1, compared with $6,400,000 daily during the first half of this year.

Since the dollar was revalued, early in 1934, the Nation's gold stocks have mounted more than $5,000,000,000 to $12,433,190,000.

On July 20, the Treasury recorded a $42,000,000 net reduction in its gold holdings. This represented the first decline since last October, and was the largest drop for a single day since dollar revaluation.

The slower inflow in recent weeks, officials said, has resulted in part from increasing confidence in France since inauguration of new French financial measures, including devaluation. France formerly was one of the heaviest losers of gold to this country.

Outflow Coming.

Some authorities said reviving confidence in France, plus operation of monetary agreements providing for the sale of gold to China and Brazil, may cause gold outflows in the next few months.

Should this occur, the Treasury might begin paring down the $36,-700,000,000 public debt with funds it receives from the sale of gold.

Under its gold "sterilization" program, the Treasury borrows from the money market to pay for gold acquisitions. The program, launched last December, is designed to prevent gold imports from increasing the supply of domestic credit.

Over a Billion Borrowed.

Thus far, the Treasury has borrowed more than $1,000,000,000 to operate the sterilization plan. Should this amount of gold be sold for export to other countries, the Treasury presumably would use the proceeds to retire a corresponding amount of indebtedness.

Officials said it was unlikely the Treasury would use receipts from gold sales to retire indebtedness as the transactions occurred, but probably would wait until it had a sizable fund stored up for the purpose.

Festival Arranged For Dance Masters

A series of six more summer festival programs will be held this month at the Sylvan Theater, it was announced yesterday by the Community Center Department. The first will be tomorrow, when the United States Marine Band, conducted by Capt. Taylor Branson, will give its only festival concert of the season, and the Lisa Gardiner Dancers will appear in a program arranged for the Dancing Masters of America, who are holding a convention here this week.

The next festival program will be the Blackfriars Guild production of "If I Were King," to be given Thursday at 7:45 p. m. (the time for all the programs). The remaining features all will be given on Tuesday nights. August 10 the Washington Players will appear in their fourth performance of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" August 17, the Langley Lambs Club will present its version of the well-known old melodrama, "The Drunkard;" August 24 the theater group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will give "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," and will be preceded by a concert given by the United States Army Band, and August 31 there will be a performance by the Alice Louise Hunter dance group.

sign, and the ship will be constructed throughout of fire resisting material in accordance with the recommendations contained in the recent Senate safety at sea report, which resulted from the investigation of the Morro Castle and Mohawk disasters.

"A feature will be a three-compartment stability standard, which means that any three compartments throughout the length of the vessel could be flooded in an accident without endangering the ship. Life boat facilities provide a seat for each passenger and member of the crew. Most of the boats will be motor propelled and radio equipped to conform with the latest requirements of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

"Modern and larger accommodations for the crew, including a recreation de' are in the plans.

"Accommodations are provided for passengers of three classes. From the promenade deck, which may be completely enclosed during inclement weather, there will be accessible to the cabin class passengers a smoking room foyer, lounge, library, dining room, writing room, gallery, cocktail foyer, reception room, and a large ball room. A large swimming pool also will be provided which can be used throughout the year.

"Public rooms and recreation space for the tourist class are provided on the decks immediately below the promenade deck, and consist of a large lounge, dining room, writing room, children's play room, and smoking room. Third class passengers will be provided with a covered promenade, available for use under all weather conditions, a smoking room, lounge, and dining room.

Robberies Net Thieves $1,000 Over Week-End

2 Score Homes Entered, Purses of 3 Women Are Taken.

Nearly two score homes and business places were ransacked and robbed, a cab driver lost his meager earnings and the pocketbooks of three women were snatched from under their arms in Washington over the week-end. Total lost was estimated at $1,000.

Her pocketbook containing a $600 diamond ring, a $35 watch and $118 in cash was stolen from under a counter in her restaurant in the 800 block Thirteenth street northwest, Margaret Hillow, 23, 901 Hamilton street northwest, reported to police.

Sneak Thief Gets $210.

A sneak thief ransacked her room at 1221 Twelfth street northwest and escaped with $210, Kay Brown reported to police.

Colored men snatched three pocketbooks. The first reported was that of Beulah McCrey, 1508 Seventh street northwest, who said her purse, containing $12.15, was taken on P street between Seventh and Eighth streets northwest.

Addassa Stafford, 1702 Summit place northwest, lost $68 when two men grabbed her pocketbook at Lanier and Summit places. She told police the men approached from behind and disappeared in Rock Creek Park.

Only $4 was the loot for two men who snatched a pocketbook belonging to Edna Holbrook, 1801 Newton street northwest, in the 1800 block Ingleside terrace. Police were told the men escaped in an automobile the license numbers of which proved it had been stolen earlier in the evening.

Maryland Visitor Robbed.

Clifton Martin, of Gaithersburg, Md., was robbed of $75 early yesterday at Twenty-ninth street and Olive avenue northwest, when attacked by two men. He told police the men took the money after throwing him to the street.

A street car motorman reported the loss of $12 from his change carrier, which he left unattended in the front of the car while he attempted to stop a fight in the rear. The incident occurred at Fourteenth and U streets northwest. The victim was Robert E. Powen, 923 Eighteenth street northwest.

Tony Astoro, 236 Fourth street southwest, reported a safe in his home was broken into, and $100 in cash and a $60 watch taken. Police later arrested Raymond Zells, 23, 100 block Sixth street southeast, who was charged with grand larceny.

Armed with a butcher knife, a colored man threatened to kill Norman V. Hough, 753 Seventh street southeast, a cab driver, if he did not surrender his earnings.

Hough said he was hired by the man at Eighth and K streets southeast. At First and K streets southeast, the colored man touched the knife to Hough's neck and demanded his money. The driver gave him $2.

Robbers ransacked the offices and safe of the Eagle Bedding Co., 1123 Seventh street northwest, and made off with $65.45. The place was entered through a rear window, according to Nathan Kluft, employe.

Many other homes, business places and automobiles were broken into.

3 Cleared of Killing And Burning Kinsman

Burgaw, N. C., Aug. 1 (AP).—A jury today acquitted three men of killing their kinsmen, Paul Krochmalny, and cremating his body on their farm.

Freed after months' imprisonment were Pete Krochmalny, his son, Paul, and a son-in-law, Irvin Williams.

The State charged the trio slew "Old" Paul shortly after he came here from Toledo so they could keep $1,160 in money orders belonging to him that had been delivered to them.

Officers Lack Clews In Kansas Attack Case

Topeka, Kans., Aug. 1 (AP).—Officers tonight lacked clews to three colored men who attacked 20-year-old Marie Fink after killing her escort, Verne T. Hedrick, 29, at the roadside near here Friday night.

Every detail of the slaying and triple assault has been verified as first told to officers by the hysterical young woman immediately after the crime, Sheriff Roy A. Boast said.

Pituitary Hormone May Make Genius of Runt, Say Scientists

Carnegie Institution Experts Report Secretions May Overcome Inferiority Complexes by Adding Stature to Undersized Individuals.

By the Associated Press.

Hormones from the pituitary gland may be used in the near future to overcome inferiority complexes and possibly develop backwrad, retiring individuals into geniuses, Dr. Oscar Riddle, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, said yesterday.

Psychiatrists declare that many persons with ability and intelligence never make full use of their mental powers because of an inferiority complex resulting from their short stature. Dr. Riddle added that "at some future time, and this may not be a distant future," it will be possible to stimulate the growth of "runts" by systematic injections of growth hormones which are normally secreted by the pituitary gland located at the base of the brain.

Such advanced medical treatment would not guarantee the production of another Edison, Einstein or Marconi, but in many cases would convert the individual from a mediocre worker into a competent, confident person able to use his intelligence, which might be that of a genius, to its maximum possibilities.

This stimulation has been produced in laboratory animals, the Carnegie endocrinologist said, and has even enabled dogs which were hereditary dwarfts to achieve additional growth. It is not yet ready for widespread human application, he added, because "none of these growth hormones can be prepared in a pure state. Therefore, for a time this whole subject should remain in the hands of the few investigators and clinicians who are especially competent to deal with it."

It may also be possible in the near future to control the abnormal growth of individuals who develop into giants, Dr. Riddle declared, since their tremendous size is a result of over-secretion of growth hormones from the pituitary gland.

Research now under way gives promise of developing "anti-hormones," substances which oppose or nullify the work of secretions from the body's glands, and administration of these to individuals during their period of fastest growth would provide the necessary brake on their development, he said.

A.F.L. Opens Drive To Take Members Away From C. I. O.

Lowell, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor launched a drive to take thousands of workers in the textile, rubber, electric machinery, auto and other industries from the Committee for Industrial Organization tonight.

With the announcement came a charge by Francis P. Fenton, New England A. F. of L. representative, that John L. Lewis' C. I. O. "has continued to raid and tear asunder craft unions." Fenton said the A. F. of L. would send 12 more organizers into New England.

Fenton and John F. Gatelee, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Labor, said they expected the fifty-second annual State convention, opening tomorrow, to ratify the campaign, expenses of which would be met by a 5 per cent assessment.

"We tried every means to heal the breach," Fenton said of the C. I. O. unions' separation of November, 1935, "but the C. I. O. balked us. Now we will fight fire with fire."

German-American Camp Has U.S. History Exhibit

Andover, N. J., Aug. 1 (AP).—An accumulation of Americana in Camp Nordland's administration building was noted today by visitors to the German American bund's camp in the Sussex Hills. Opening of the camp recently resulted in protests by veterans and other groups.

Nations' Veterans Shout for Peace In Berlin Stadium

Berlin, Aug. 1 (AP).—Cries for peace echoed in the Olympic stadium today on the twenty-third anniversary of Germany's declaration of war on Russia.

A hundred thousand German war maimed, and delegations from ten foreign countries, joined in expressing hope there would be no more war.

French Veteran Henri Pichot was cheered when he demanded in German that there should be "peace forever in Europe, never war again."

Marshal Werner von Blomberg, Reich Minister of War, shook Pichot's hand and the band played the Marseillaise.

The new army mingled with the old in the crowd, and deep-throated "heils" rose when a detachment of the army, air force, labor service and Chancellor Adolf Hitler's bodyguard goosestepped by.

World on Brink Of a Great War, Russians Warn

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Aug. 1.—Soviet editorial writers agreed today the prospect of a new World War looms more ominously than at any time since the last one.

In the Soviet Union it was "anti-war day," anniversary of the outbreak of war between Russia and Germany in 1914, and the government-controled writers almost unanimously turned to the Spanish and Far Eastern conflicts for evidence that a new holocaust is in the making.

Georgi Dimitroff, secretary general of the Comintern, writing in Pravda, charged "Fascist aggressors are setting the world on fire." The Soviet's power prevents them from starting a "new world slaughter," he added.

The shooting of Marshal Mikchail Tuchachevsky and seven other Soviet army leaders, convicted of trying to undermine the Red army, was called by Dimitroff the "most powerful destructive blow against war-mongers in recent times."

The United States and other nations were criticized by Izvestia for what it called a tolerant attitude toward agressors. It blamed Great Britain particularly for moving to recognize the insurgent regime of Gen. Francisco Franco as a belligerent.

Dimitroff accused the "Fascist bloc" of trying by the Ethiopian, Spanish and North China conflicts to obtain "strategic military positions and sea routes and sources for war materials to unleash an imperialistic war in the future."

Byrd's Aide and 4 Die In Oslo Plane Crash

Oslo, Norway, Aug. 1 (AP).—Five Norwegians, including Chris Braathen, who accompanied Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd on two of his Antarctic expeditions, were killed today when an airplane crashed into the harbor here. The pilot, Arild Wideroee, was one of Norway's best-known aviators. The cause of the tragedy was not immediately ascertained.

Cities' Building Is Encouraged By Wagner Bill

Measure Would Shift Problem From U. S. Government.

By the Associated Press.

States and local communities would be encouraged to provide healthful living quarters for slum dwellers under the Wagner housing bill which the Senate will consider today.

Previous efforts of the Federal Government to provide families of low income with safe and sanitary dwellings at moderate rentals have been confined chiefly to direct Government expenditures under the Public Works Administration.

The Wagner bill would shift much of the responsibility for solving the slum problem to individual communities. Except for a limited number of Federal demonstration projects, housing construction and slum eradication would be left to local initiative.

The bill is designed to dovetail with State laws authorizing creation of local housing authorities similar to sanitary districts and other semi-autonomous political units.

Could Borrow U. S. Funds.

State or local authorities, as well as private companies of a limited-profit nature, could borrow money from the Federal Government to build low-rent projects or to clear slums.

They would be given direct Federal aid in the form of lump-sum grants to aid construction, or annual payments sufficient to assure low retnals.

Authorizes Bond Issue.

The Wagner bill would authorize a $700,000,000 Federal bond issue during the next three years and an initial appropriation of $26,000,000.

Lump-sum grants would be limited to 25 per cent of the cost of a project, with an additional 15 per cent in the form of relief labor to be donated at the discretion of the President. A local community would be required to contribute an additional 20 per cent to the housing agency undertaking the project. The Government would lend the rest.

Under the annual subsidy plan, the housing agency could elect to borrow all of the money needed for construction or development. The Government would contract to pay a sum each year not exceeding approximately 45 per cent of the estimated income necessary to maintain the project.

Interior Unit Workers Will Celebrate Aug. 11

In celebration of the fact that they are now housed "under our own roof," employes of the Department of the Interior will entertain themselves August 11 with a dance in the dining room and recreation hall of the new Interior Building.

Entertainment will be under auspices of the Interior Department Recreation Association, of which Hillory A. Tolson is president and Miss Evelyn Adams is entertainment committee chairman.

Plea for Labor Peace.

Nassau, Bahamas, Aug. 1 (AP).—Uneasiness over recent labor riots in Trinidad and Barbados, sister British colonies to the south, impelled conservative native workers here to appeal through the church today for industrial peace in these islands.

Jealousy Seen As Motive in Church Killing

Husband Who Slew Doctor, Ended Life, Worried Over Wife.

By the Associated Press.

El Centro, Calif, Aug. 1.—A coroner's jury failed today to discover a motive for the Sabbath Day murder of Dr. O. L. Webster and suicide of Fred W. Simmons at the altar of the Seventh Day Adventist Church here.

Mrs. Simmons testified she knew no reason her 40-year-old husband should shoot Dr. Webster, 37. She said Simmons took her to church yesterday and called for her after the services.

As they were driving away her husband suddenly noticed Dr. Webster and said he wanted to speak to him. He stopped the car and got a rifle. She said she did not see the shooting.

The jury returned a verdict of murder and suicide, but reported to District Attorney E. W. Heald it was unable to find a motive.

Confiscated Pistol.

H. E. Cox, sheriff's deputy, told of confiscating a pistol from Simmons, May 2, in a domestic disturbance at the Simmons' home. He also told of being called to the Adventist Church at Imperial, December 12, 1936, when Simmons struck E. Effler, of Calexico.

District Attorney Heald testified Simmons came to his office and protested against his wife's activities in the church, saying she was spending too much money for church purposes and sending his children to the church school against his wishes.

Yesterday, Simmons left his automobile and shouted: "I want Webster." The physician ran into the building and dropped on his face near the altar. As 65 men, women and children looked on, Simmons fired into the back of the prone man and then turned the rifle on himself.

Printed Cards Found.

Printed cards found near the slayer's body and bearing his name dealt with infidelity. "In Imperial Valley a man may say to his neighbor's wife: 'are you going to San Diego for overnight with me?'" the cards read in part. "If the woman is of age and wants to go, it is lawful. If the husband objects and offers fight, he may be thrown into jail under peace bond for life. Should we not all be law abiding citizens, or should we get out a petition to change the law?"

Chief of Police J. Sterling Oswalt said Simmons recently had attempted to place an advertisement in a local newspaper warning unidentified individuals to leave his wife alone.

Indigestion After Swim Fatal to D. C. Man, 29

Chatham M. Melchoir, 29, 1605 E street southeast, employe of the Fullman Co., died at Cedarhurst, Md., of acute indigestion shortly after he returned from a swim Saturday.

George Melchoir, his father, said young Melchoir, his wife and 3-year-old son and mother and father went to the beach for the afternoon, and shortly after coming out of the water his sun suffered severe stomach pains and died a few hours later.

Sex Maniacs Sought in Death Of Schoolgirl

Forty Persons Questioned After Attack Slaying in Brooklyn.

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 1.—Brooklyn detectives and patrolmen today sought known degenerates as possible suspects in the municipal attack-slaying of 8-year-old Paula Magagna.

Less than 24 hours after the third-grade parochial school pupil's body, stripped and assaulted, was found in the basement of her home, more than 40 persons had been taken for questioning.

Detectives checked every alibi and most of those questioned were released quickly. Charges were filed against none.

A small crowd waited all night outside the police station as authorities sought to solve the fourth such crime in Brooklyn in four years.

Only an hour or so after she had gone out of the house to play, the child was lured into the basement. The killer looped a clothesline four times around her neck, stripped off her clothes and assaulted her.

Her body, tossed on top of a baby carriage and still warm, was found by a tenant who went into the cellar with some rubbish.

Reich Diplomat Dies.

Berlin, Aug. 1 (AP).—The death of Frederic Hans von Rosenberg, 63, foreign minister of Germany in 1922-23, was announced today. He died Friday at Fuerstenzell, in lower Bavaria. Von Rosenberg was minister to Sweden from 1924 to 1932 and Ambassador to Turkey from 1933 to 1935.

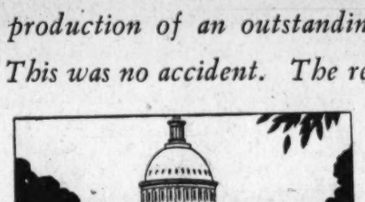
THE EIGHTH OF EIGHT REASONS WHY . . .

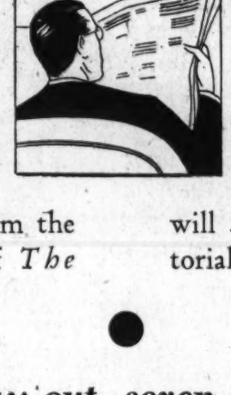
The Washington Post Grows

THE SPEED of a newspaper's growth is dependent upon its ability to know what its readers want and to give those readers the best of everything that must go into the production of an outstanding publication. Almost every one knows that THE WASHINGTON POST has doubled its circulation in less than four years. This was no accident. The reasons why are interesting. And the purpose of this series of chats with readers is simply to tell how it was done.



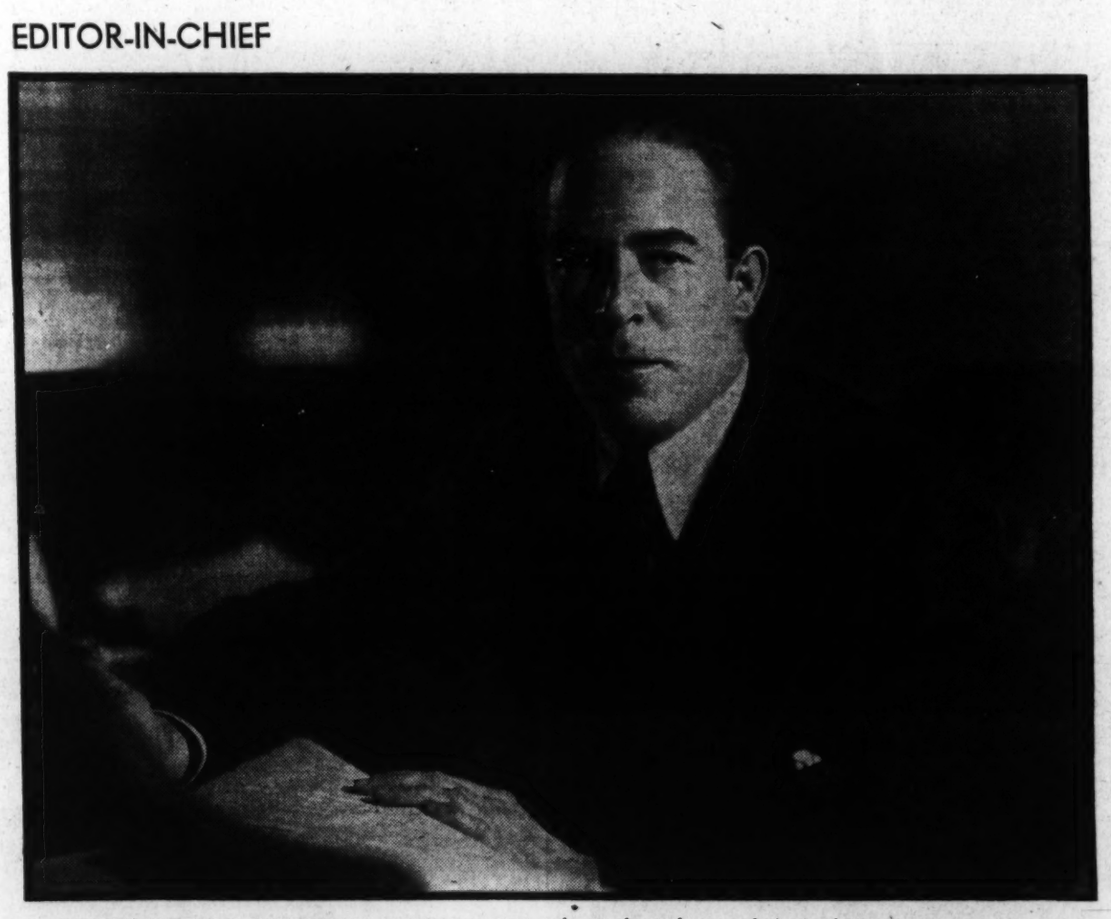
NO. 8—EDITORIALS

A CENTURY AGO, newspapers had much to say, but very little to tell. They were more vitally concerned with opinions than with news. But the development of telephone, telegraph and wireless communication has changed all that. The modern newspaper is an organ inclined to tell more than it says. Editorial comment, for decades the chief function of journalism, has been submerged by the reportorial flood. But today . . . perhaps more than ever before . . . people want independent, objective and intelligently critical opinions on the underlying meaning and significance of the news. To meet this need has been, from the outset of its present ownership, a fundamental purpose of The Washington Post. Its editorial comment is based on wide knowledge, fortified by careful research, strengthened by daily staff conferences. Thus, the editorial page seeks always to be helpful to its readers in separating the wheat from the chaff of current discussion; in maintaining unbiased consideration, regardless of propagandist argument and special interest pleadings of any kind. And the independence of the position of the editorial page of The Washington Post is daily demonstrated by the number of readers who do not know, in advance, what this newspaper will say on a particular issue, but who turn eagerly to its editorial page to find out.



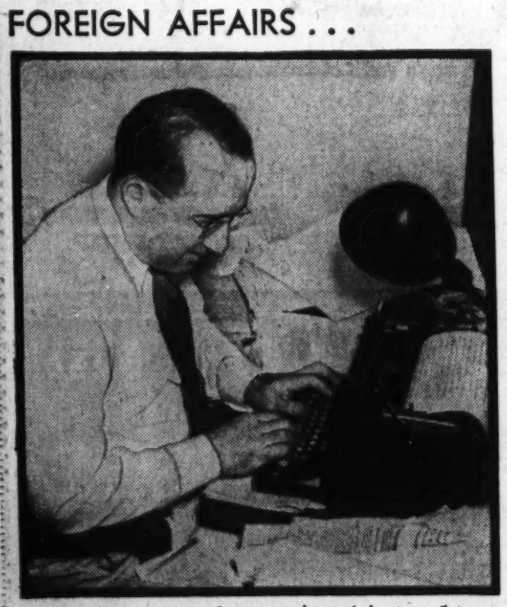
The Washington Post day in and day out, seven mornings a week, brings to its 100,000 readers the most STIMULATING editorial treatment of local, national and world events.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF



GRADUATED FROM HAVERFORD COLLEGE in 1915, Felix Morley, Editor-in-Chief of The Washington Post, began his newspaper career as a reporter on the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Since then, he has served as a member of the staff of the United Press at Philadelphia, as Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, on the editorial staff of the Baltimore Sun and as foreign correspondent in the Far East and Europe for the same newspaper. Since 1933, he has been The Post's Editor-in-Chief. Between newspaper assignments, Mr. Morley took a degree at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar, received an appointment as a Hutchinson Research Fellow at the London School of Economics, was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship to make a study of the organization and constitutional development of the League of Nations, served as a member of the staff of the Brookings Institution, during which period he completed his book, "The Society of Nations," published in 1932. In 1936, he received the Pulitzer Editorial Award "for clearness of style, sound reasoning and power to influence public opinion in what the writer believes to be the right direction."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS . . .



BARNET NOVER, long a student of foreign affairs, holds that broad topic as his editorial specialty. He came to The Post from Buffalo, having held a chair of history at the university there. Mr. Nover is the author of a regular foreign affairs column, appearing three times a week on the "opposite editorial" page.

FINANCE . . .

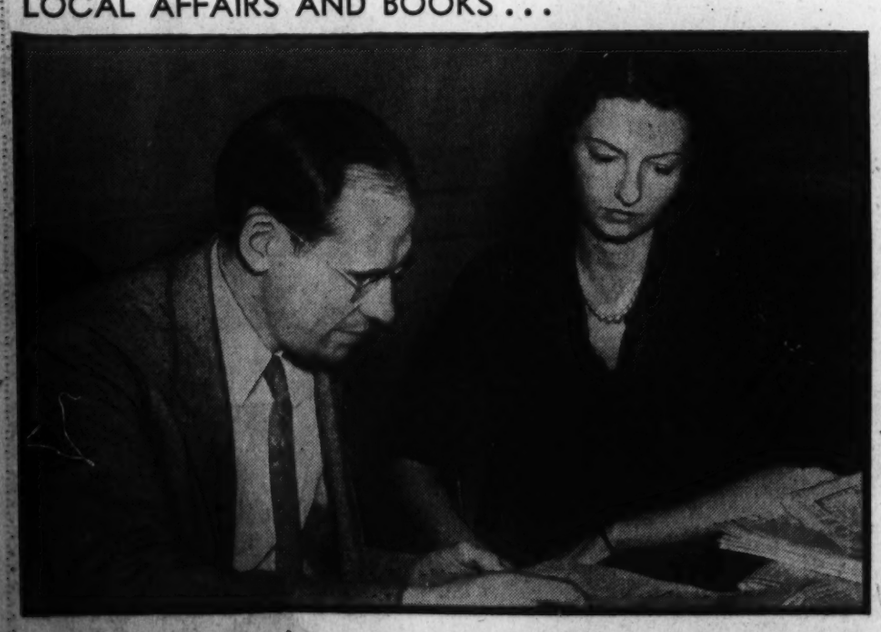
LOCAL AFFAIRS AND BOOKS . . .



MERLO J. PUSEY, a member of The Post's editorial staff for the past nine years, specializes, editorially, in local affairs. His series of articles, "The District Crisis," lately won wide acclaim as an intimate study of the District's entire governmental system. He is also the author of the recently published book, "The Supreme Court Crisis." Pictured with Mr. Pusey is Miss Bett Hooper, editorial writer, The Post's Book Editor and author of the column, "Book Ends."

CARTOONIST AND EDITORIAL WRITER . . .

8 Sit-Ins Hold Sunday Session Of Legislature

Michigan Members Act to Save Laws Periled by Adjournment.

By the Associated Press.

Lansing, Mich., Aug. 1.—Seven State Representatives and one State Senator held today what they hoped was the first Sunday session of the Michigan Legislature in history.

In the Senate, John C. Wickstrom, Upper Peninsula Democrat, mounted lieutenant governor's rostrum, called the empty chamber to order, declared the Senate in session, and then announced adjournment, subject to the call of the chair.

In the House, Speaker George A. Schroeder presided over six fellow legislators. Mrs. Elizabeth Belen, Lansing Democrat, gave a short invocation, after which it was voted to adjourn until 2 p. m. Monday.

Up to Attorney General.

Status of the Sunday session was open to question, pending an opinion from the attorney general regarding the stormy adjournment of the Senate Friday night after the shelving of Gov. Murphy's labor relations bill. A fist fight between two Senators marked the adjournment.

If the Senate adjournment is held illegal, as many House members claim it is, the lieutenant governor can issue an order for the Senate to be brought in—by the State police if necessary. The House members who met today and plan to meet again tomorrow and Tuesday say they hope to establish the illegality of the Senate's announcement.

The State constitution specifies that neither House can adjourn for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. The Representatives have withheld this concurrence, and hope to repudiate the Senate's action by continuing in session.

Hope to Save Legislation.

The stay-in legislators, observers said, desire to bring about a legal adjournment at a later date that will leave no question of the validity of legislation passed this session.

One school of thought holds that unless both houses can meet and adjourn formally by mutual consent the special session will not come to an end until January 1, 1939. This would mean that Gov. Murphy could not call the lawmakers back into session during his present term of office.

The opinion of the attorney general is awaited to clarify the situation.

The adjournment was achieved by a coalition of Democrats with the minority Republicans.

As a result of the opposition, Michigan will lack indefinitely a labor-relations law other than a possible skeleton one providing for mediation boards unless the Governor consents to a ban on picketing by persons not employed in the struck plant.

One of his reasons for vetoing the original bill last week was the provision banning such picketing.

Before leaving for the East, where he joined President Roosevelt on a week-end cruise, Murphy said his legislative program, with the exception of a civil service bill which was passed, will be resubmitted in future extra sessions, probably beginning in the fall.

Mountain Climbers Die in Granite Slide

Body of one of two youths killed yesterday in granite slide near Rockport, Mass., is removed by rescuers. The two members of a party of eight, which included four girls, were trapped in slide of huge rock as their companions looked on horror-stricken.

Mrs. Forbes Dies; Educator's Widow

Mrs. Henry Prentiss Forbes, 86, widow of Dr. Henry P. Forbes, one-time dean of the Theological School of St. Lawrence University, died at her home at 1316 Euclid street northwest, yesterday.

Mrs. Forbes had lived in Washington since 1919 and was prominently identified with the activities of the Unversalist National Memorial Church. She came here after her husband's death in 1913.

After her marriage to Dr. Forbes in 1876, she lived in Danvers, Mass., where Dr. Forbes was pastor of the Universalist Church. In 1881 the family moved to Canton, N. Y., where Dr. Forbes took up duties with the university.

Mrs. Forbes is survived by two daughters living in Washington, Mrs. Austin H. Clark, of 1818 Wyoming avenue, and Miss Ruth Forbes, who lived with her mother. Another daughter, Mrs. Albert M. Clark, resides in Canton, N. Y., while a son, Harry W. Forbes, lives in Ridgewood, N. J.

Daniel T. Grady, Contractor, Dies

Daniel T. Grady, 71, retired contractor, died yesterday at his home, 1256 Holbrook Terrace northeast, after an illness of two weeks.

A native of Washington, Mr. Grady retired 15 years ago. He was an honorary member of the Knights of Columbus. He is survived by three sons, Daniel W. Grady, David P. Grady, and Bernard Grady, and a daughter, Mrs. Katherine Grant, all residents of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at his late residence at 8:30 a. m. Wednesday followed by requiem mass in Holy Name Church at 9. He will be buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Girl Suicide's Body Taken From River

The body of 16-year-old Leona Beck, who jumped from Key Bridge Friday night after being scolded by her mother, was recovered from the Potomac River last night after it was found floating near the bridge. Mrs. Goldie Beck, 1512 Wisconsin avenue northwest, the girl's mother, identified the body at the District Morgue.

Man Found on Ground Dies at Hospital Here

A man tentatively identified as Jessie G. Sessions, of Bend, Oreg., died yesterday at Gallinger Hospital shortly after he had been discovered lying behind a building at 487 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. He was about 30 years old.

He was treated at the hospital for epilepsy.

2 Seaford Residents Killed in Truck Crash

Seaford, Del., Aug. 1.—Two residents of this city were burned to death this morning near Newburgh, N. Y., when a truck in which they were riding struck a tree at the foot of a hill and caught fire. They are William B. Holt, 24, and Leon G. Willis, 19, who were en route to Albany, N. Y., with a load of cantaloupes when the accident occurred. The truck belonged to R. Glenn Mears, also of Seaford.

Holt, the son of J. Matthew Holt, a local farmer, is married, and is survived by his wife and a child. Willis is the son of W. George Willis, a Pennsylvania Railroad employe.

Three Men Hurt, One Jailed After Apartment Fight

Teeth, milk bottles and fists, all used freely in an apartment house fight, landed three men in Emergency Hospital yesterday and one of the three in the Third Precinct station.

According to police, Edgar W. Geoghegan, 28, 2008 Sixteenth street northwest, returned home with a friend and found two colored men trying to get in his apartment.

The men fled, with Geoghegan and Glenn Zimmerman, 22, 610 Twenty-second street northwest, in pursuit. Near the door, one of the would-be burglars threw a milk bottle, which struck Geoghegan on the head.

Zimmerman grabbed his friend's assailant and was bitten on the finger. He held on, however, until police arrived.

Geoghegan's injury was not serious, nor was Zimmerman's. His captive's hand was cut on the milk bottle.

At the Third Precinct station the man gave his name as James Gregory, colored, 27, 1300 block of U street northwest. He was held for investigation.

Crash Kills Girl; Driver Is Booked

Hollywood, Aug. 1 (AP).—Betty Tighe, 19, died today in the plunge of an automobile down Hollywood Mountain. Her escort, Carl Long, 19, escaped with minor hurst and was booked by police on suspicion of negligent homicide.

Officers said there were discrepancies in Long's story of the accident. They said he told them Miss Tighe became angered when he danced with another girls, and they went for a drive to talk matters over.

Police said Long told them he recovered consciousness to find himself seated at the wheel. The officers said the seat of the car was 75 feet from the wreckage, and it would have been impossible for him to have been in tesehta.

5 Die When Auto Falls Into Lake

Bellefontaine, Ohio, Aug. 1 (AP).—Five persons drowned today when an auto crashed through a fence along a highway and plunged into Indian Lake, 15 miles north of Bellefontaine. One woman survived the crash.

The dead were Keith (Bud) Greenwood, 26; Robert L Bartholomew and his wife, Frances Bartholomew, all of Lima; Donald Friedley, a guest from Maine in the Bartholomew home, and an unidentified girl.

Congress Given Three Weeks to Enact Program

Leaders to Speed Session and Finish All Work Before Adjourning.

House the first part of the next week.

The Presidential yacht Potomac returned last night from an overnight river cruise bearing as guests of the President Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Josephine Roche and Senator Theodore F. Green, Rhode Island.

Gov. Murphy was slated to stay the night at the White House. His visit gave renewed vigor to gossip the President is quietly working out a revamped party lineup to be composed of personal friends and liberals the Administration can depend on. Last week-end Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr. (Progressive), Wisconsin, and Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, Senate majority leader, were the President's guests.

The Leaders of 1940.

Some sources said last night that the roster of the President's guest list through the coming months will be a list of dependables for the much-rumored "new Democratic Party" by 1940. Close attention will be paid the lists for indications of possible reprisals against hitherto loyal Southern conservatives who have broken away from the President in recent weeks, not only on the court bill but on the wages-hours measure and on immediate adjournment.

The wages-hours bill in the House may be the subject of a further Southern revolt, according to speculation, although leaders say they have sufficient votes to guarantee enactment even should Southerners, 102 strong, combine with Republicans against the measure. A number of Northern Republicans, even, favor the bill and will break party lines to vote for it.

Sugar legislation is unpredictable, observers agree, but many believe that the Congressional sugar bloc is strong enough to shape the bill to their own desires on the floor, to pass it, and then to repass it if the President vetoes the measure. Sugar bloc leaders claim votes from 24 States—the 16 sugar producing States—and the eight seacoast sugar refining States.

This group will fight militantly against adjournment before a bill is passed satisfactory to their wishes. The President is unofficially neutral, although he is expected to veto any sugar bill that does not satisfy his Cabinet trio—Agriculture, State and Interior—who have fought for elimination of restrictions on refined sugar imports from the offshore producers—Hawaii, Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.

Government reorganization appears doomed for the pigeonhole at this session, with the possible exception of the single bill, already passed by the House, which grants the President six $10,000 a year assistants with "a passion for anonymity."

Youth Bitten by Tick.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 1.—Dewey Eppard, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kemper Eppard, of near Standardsville, Greene County, is at University Hospital here suffering from spotted fever.

About three weeks ago a tick was taken off young Eppard, but he did not know whether or not he had been bitten.

Mrs. Ely Culbertson on Contract

National Hold-Up Week.

A correspondent from Texas writes:

"Dear Mrs. Culbertson:

After reading about some of these 'National Shoe-cleaning weeks' and other such 'weeks,' it occurred to me that the same thing might be done with Bridge. Why not devote a week of your column to one phase of Contract Bridge? At best, it would be highly instructive; at worst, it would be just another one of those impressively titled weeks.

Yours truly,

A. M. P., Galveston, Texas."

The idea seems to have considerable merit and so, without further ado, this week will be devoted to the "Holdup" play. If my correspondent chooses, he may call it "National Hold-up Week."

"National Holdup Week."

by a player to take a winning card until one opponent's cards in that suit have been exhausted. The purpose of the holdup is to sever the line of communication between the opponents. Its effect is seen at its best in the hand below.

South, dealer.

Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ J 5 ♡ K J 10 ◇ A J 9 6 3 ♣ J 10 8
♠ K Q 10 9 2 ♡ 8 6 4 3 ◇ 7 5 ♣ K 9	North West East South	♠ 7 6 3 ♡ 9 5 2 ◇ K 8 4 ♣ 7 5 4 2
	♠ A 8 4 ♡ A Q 7 ◇ Q 10 2 ♣ A Q 6 3

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	3 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

The bidding is standard. South has 4-plus honor-tricks distributed 4-3-3-3, so has an opening no-trump bid, with values to spare. Note that North does not mention the diamonds but raises the no-trump bid.

West opens the King of spades, and South should not take his Ace until the third round of the suit. Then he can afford to take the diamond finesse in perfect safety. Although it loses, East cannot return a spade and West cannot regain the lead to run the rest of his spade suit. The best East can do is return a club, after winning with the King of diamonds. South however, should refuse to finesse, since he can take nine tricks at this point.

The result would be far different had South taken the first or second spade trick. Then East would have a spade after winning with the diamond King, and would be able to return his partner's suit, enabling his side to take four spade tricks and one diamond to defeat the contract.

Police Doubt Suspect's Story of Killing Lingle

Los Angeles, Aug. 1 (AP).—A purported voluntary admission by Roy G. Ward that he killed Alfred G. (Jake) Lingle, Chicago reporter, in 1930, was discounted today by police, although they held him on a worthless check charge.

Tom Covett, district attorney's investigator, said he learned Ward told a similar story in admitting participation in the gangster killing of Marvin Hart, liquor racketeer, in 1931. Covett said this story proved untrue.

Iowa Wins by Feet Over Wisconsin in Tall Corn Contest

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug 1 (AP).—Iowa's reputation as the State of the tallest corn remained intact today.

Wisconsin, the challenger, didn't come within peering distance of the top of the Hawkeye sample.

Even the Badger States's Gov. Philip La Follette, acknowledged to his host and rival, Gov. Nelson G. Karschel, that "you have us backed off the map when it comes to corn."

Iowa's best in the corn tournament was a stalk measuring 16 feet 5⅛ inches. Wisconsin's measured 13 feet 1⅜ inches.

The judging was done at noon on the capitol steps, which had been transformed into a cornfield, soil and all, with an adjoining patch of shocked oats and two prize pigs rooting in the lawn.

Rites to Be Held Today For Mrs. Clara Lincoln

Funeral services for Mrs. Clara Anna Lincoln, 64, who died Friday at Mother Jones' Rest Home after many years' illness, will be held this morning at 8:30 in the residence of her son, William Dudley, 2 Girard street northeast. Requiem mass will be said at St Aloysius Church at 9, followed by burial in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mrs. Lincoln was a life-long resident of Washington, D. C. She is survived by her husband, Marshall T. Lincoln; another son, Henry Dudley, and a daughter, Claire Dudley, all residents of Washington.

Reds Drift From Pole.

Soviet North Pole Camp (by wireless to Moscow), Aug. 1 (AP).—Fine snow reduced visibility to about 200 yards today. Temperature remained at 32 degrees Fahrenheit. The camp had drifted to about 145 miles from the North Pole, at 87.53 degrees north latitude, 7 west longitude.

11-Cent Milk Will Continue, Dairyman Says

Highland Farms Deliveries Interstate Commerce, Head Contends.

tion to a purchase a Virginia resident might make in a Washington department store. It is merely an order for an article to be delivered in the future, he maintained.

Actual sales are made through the company's ice cream stores in Virginia, but at a price which conforms to the commission's ruling, according to Stephens.

"The Highland Farms Dairy," according to Philip Rosenfeld, the company's lawyer, "recognizes the right of the milk commission to promulgate any price order it so sees fit for the sale of milk in Alexandria and Clarendon, and the company will not violate this regulation. But on interstate orders it is not bound by such regulations."

The injunction states that, should the company violate its conditions "by engaging in any way in the sale of milk" at prices below those fixed by the commission, it must show cause before Judge Sutton why it should not be punished for the violation.

The order is the second Judge Sutton has granted the commission within ten days.

Roosevelt Island Plans.

A Washington lady has come forward with the interesting suggestion that Roosevelt Island, lying near the west bank of the Potomac between the Memorial and Key bridges, should be developed into a playground for children.

She has developed the idea to the extent of producing a plan for the island which calls for a bicycle path around its shoreline, encircling a swimming pool, athletic fields and courts, a play lot for small children and a pavilion. Unquestionably this plan would give the city an extremely pleasant playground, conveniently located and protected against the dangers of automobiles, rowdyism and neighbors' complaints.

The idea is appealing, particularly because it would provide children from the congested Georgetown area with play facilities comparable to those offered elsewhere throughout the city. However, Roosevelt Island is already being developed along rather divergent lines. For some time CCC boys have been working spasmodically on the island under the direction of the National Park Service—the land being Federal property donated to the Government as a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt. The aim is to make Roosevelt Island a sylvan retreat where horseback riders, hikers and just plain sitters and picnickers may find respite from the confusion and dust of city streets.

The work, however, has been proceeding very slowly. This does not seem to worry the Park Service architects, who expect years to pass before their plans can be completely realized. But the city at large has not this patience. Perhaps the playground proposal will speed the work along a bit. Perhaps—one may hope so—it will raise the question of whether or not the present plan is in the best interests of Washington as a community.

Chautemps Looks Ahead.

The "three-year plan" which Premier Camille Chautemps is sponsoring to pull France out of her economic and financial predicament constitutes recognition of the fact that her difficulties are too considerable to be overcome in a short time.

The new government, empowered by Parliament to issue decree-laws to bring order out of the present chaos, is determined to boost taxes and reduce governmental costs so far as that can safely be done. But even if the revenue anticipations of Messrs. Chautemps and Bonnet are not disappointed, and even if expenditures can be held down to rock bottom, a fully balanced budget will not be in sight for some time to come. Indeed, the government finds it necessary to supplement tax revenue at the moment by an additional loan of 15,000,000,000 francs ($590,000,000) from the Bank of France to cover its pressing current deficit.

What is needed, therefore, is a long-time program in which the emphasis would be not only on ways and means of increasing governmental income but more particularly on the more fundamental need of increasing industrial production. Without such an increase the goal of larger revenues can hardly be reached.

The fact is incontrovertible that the boosting of wages in French industries and the general establishment of the 40-hour week, two of the major reforms put through by the Blum regime, have resulted in a dangerous rise in production costs. This, in turn, has led to an upward movement in prices, with the result that the level of real wages is now little if at all higher than it was before the Popular Front victory of last year. Should the price level continue to rise, the ephemeral value of wage increases made in a depreciating currency would be apparent to all.

The only way in which this vicious spiral can be broken is by increasing industrial productivity while keeping down the costs. Since no government capable of holding power in France at the present time would agree to lowering wages, or increasing hours of work, the solution must be found in more extensive production under present wage-and-hour schedules. Former Premier Blum and other members of his government came to recognize this fact. But M. Blum's pleas to the workers to turn out at least as much work in 40 hours as they had previously in 48, fell on deaf ears.

Now Premier Chautemps is going to try again to solve the dilemma of a rising price level that tends to overtake rising wages. Like his predecessor he will resort to moral suasion. But his scheme also calls for a three-way agreement among employers' associations, the General Confederation of Labor and the government, to insure industrial peace.

The approach is rational. But the weaknesses underlying France's financial and economic situation are deep-seated. It will take time and patience and a large measure of co-operation to remove them.

A Labor Standards Board.

The wages-and-hours bill as passed by the Senate is much more acceptable than the original Black bill. The latter was a general wage-fixing proposal which undertook to set fair wages for all industries in which collective bargaining had not been effectively established. The rewritten measure applies only to workers whose wages and hours are "substandard." In other words, it is designed to improve the condition of sweated labor.

The proposed Labor Standards Board may not raise minimum wage rates above 40 cents per hour nor reduce the working period below 40 hours weekly. Within these statutory limitations, however, it may use discretion in determining what wages and hours shall be. The bill does not require the board to set these standards at levels "consistent with health, efficiency and general well-being of workers." On the contrary, there is a warning against abrupt changes that would dislocate industry or curtail employment. The board is to proceed only as far and as rapidly as is "economically feasible."

To function efficiently the proposed board must obviously be given a great deal of latitude. Yet the last-minute amendments indicate that many Senators would not be willing to trust its judgment, especially in cases involving child labor, seasonal workers and those handling perishable products. By voting to remove such workers from the board's jurisdiction, the Senate has ironically rendered it impotent to deal with types of labor that need protection most.

Of course the board, if established, will have innumerable requests to exempt this and that group from the scope of its wage and hour decrees. It will be hard to decide when such exceptional treatment is justified. Too many exceptions would result in a failure to correct abuses that Federal regulation was designed to eliminate. On the other hand, too rigid insistence upon higher standards of pay and shorter hours for exploited groups would certainly force some employers out of business and thereby reduce employment.

In short, the task set for the proposed Labor Standards Board is one of extreme difficulty. The vast extent of the country and the varied character of our interstate industries are a formidable challenge to any administrative body. And its projected work is made all the harder because of the necessity of pursuing a realistic policy that is neither reactionary on the one hand nor impulsively progressive on the other.

Obviously wage and hour standards cannot be raised for any large group of workers without necessitating some readjustments, and probably creating some unemployment. Under the bill as passed by the Senate the board must decide where to draw the line. It is required to appoint committees consisting of representatives of employers, employes and the public to investigate and advise it before issuing orders, although such advice need not be accepted. However, these committees might, if encouraged, be most helpful. Eventually they might well constitute the basis for a system of decentralized industrial self-regulation, under Government supervision, which would be really adapted to American conditions.

Meantime, if we are to have a Federal board with power to decree what wages and hours shall be for a large proportion of the country's industrial workers, one can only hope that it will pursue a middle course. That is, it should be conservative enough to disappoint those impetuous reformers who demand disastrously sudden and sweeping changes. And it should be progressive enough to give occasional salutary shocks to those standpatters who want no changes at all.

Small Faith In Neutrality.

The latest poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion, published in The Post yesterday, reveals an encouraging degree of national alertness to certain fundamental aspects of the world crisis.

It is interesting to note, for instance, that this representative cross-section is taken in neither by the extreme prophets of gloom nor by those who argued that we need not be concerned by the drift toward war. While a very large percentage of Americans are convinced that another world war is coming, a much larger percentage do not believe it will come within the next year. Yet 44 per cent are persuaded that if and when such a war comes the United States will not be able to stay out.

This throws a sardonic light on the pretensions of those who have been acclaiming a mandatory neutrality policy for the United States and who, by an almost criminal indifference to realities, have thereby opposed co-operative action with other nations to bolster the structure of peace. For the poll shows that practically one out of every two Americans believes, by implication, in just such a course as the only alternative to involvement in a major war.

Nor does there seem to be any uncertainty as to the direction from which the threat to peace is greatest. One out of every three voters in the institute poll believes Nazi Germany is today the greatest potential aggressor while 76 per cent are convinced that the next war will be the result of actions taken by one or another of the three great "have not" nations—Germany, Italy or Japan.

Our Troops In China.

There have been many changes in China since 1900, when an international army fought its way to the relief of the legations in Peiping, then besieged by a horde of ill-armed, anti-foreign "Boxers." But through all these changes the great powers have insisted upon and maintained one extraordinary privilege, exacted from China after the suppression of the Boxer rising. That privilege is the maintenance of foreign troops in the Tientsin-Peiping area.

Because of the Boxer protocol of 1901 hundreds of American soldiers are now in the area of current Sino-Japanese hostilities. Because of this one-sided treaty French and Japanese contingents have already come close to blows in Tientsin. Because of the presence of these foreign regiments a serious incident, involving several great powers, may at any time flare out in the trouble zone.

Over and above this, the Boxer protocol has contributed no little to the rise of the present critical situation. The Japanese have built up their present campaign of aggression behind a facade of unquestionable treaty rights. A certain number of their troops are legally entitled to be in Tientsin, Peiping and intermediate towns. It is their privilege to hold maneuvers, use roads and railways, march in force over Chinese soil. Behind these rights, shared by other nations, the present aggressive campaign has been prepared.

If the situation were not so serious it would contain an element of high comedy. The essential purpose of the Boxer protocols was to insure continuation of communications between the capital of China and the sea. But Peiping is no longer the capital. And it is not China, but Japan, one of the powers which gained by the treaty of 1901, that now imperils peaceful communication with Peiping. Not a single purpose intended when this treaty was signed is now being served by the presence of foreign troops in this area.

Turkey, and more recently Egypt, have shaken off all the one-sided capitulations whereby the great powers were given special rights and privileges in those countries. The present anomalous situation around Peiping emphasizes that similar action in the case of China is long overdue. How much overdue it is, in the case of the United States, would soon be realized if a Japanese shell should explode in the midst of a company of American marines.

It may be argued that the foreign troops in this area are now serving a useful function by making Japanese plans of conquest more difficult to fulfill. But the situation would be healthier, and far more honest, if there were neither American nor Japanese nor any other foreign contingents with legal right to occupy this zone. A regiment of American marines would not stop the Japanese advance half as effectively as forthright action by this country to restore to China the unfettered sovereignty which she must possess in order to govern her own territory.

A part of the eventual settlement in North China should be the complete abrogation of the Boxer protocol of 1901. And in this desirable undertaking the United States, if the "good neighbor" phrase means anything, should properly take the lead.

Houseboat Leviathan.

Old horses that have outlived their usefulness are often put out to grass by humane masters, and are thus permitted to spend their declining days amid green pastures and beside still waters.

But the fate of other, inanimate means of locomotion is usually less idyllic. Inevitably it is the scrap heap for these. This is wasteful. But in no instance is this waste more clearly demonstrated than in the case of ocean liners.

Unlike motor cars and locomotives, their period of potential use is not over when they are taken off the registers. Many of them are still stout of beam at the time they are ordered dismantled, still capable of carrying cargoes and human freight. But the judge is the inexorable law of economics which decrees that when a vessel is no longer capable of making money its time is over.

If the suggestion of Gov. Winship of Puerto Rico regarding the future of the Leviathan is followed such wastes may in future be reduced. Gov. Winship has proposed that the erstwhile Queen of the Seas, which never managed to get out of the white elephant class, be sent to Puerto Rico to serve as a floating hotel.

We hope the scheme is feasible. For there is something about ships which is more than inanimate. They have moods and personalities and even tempers. They are the embodiment of that lure of the unknown which has always been strong in human hearts. And if, when their days of sailing are over, they can be brought to some safe haven to rest at anchor for a new period of usefulness, like an old salt who has retired but has his tales to tell, it would be all to the good.

There are a lot of foolish men in this world. A few days ago one of them married a woman who can throw a discus 143 feet.

Astronomers say the newly discovered comet, which is directly approaching the earth at a high rate of speed, has lost its tail. Sounds more to us as if it had lost its head.

Fan Applauds Senators.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I meant to write a letter about the Washington baseball team ten days ago, but waited to get the reaction of more fans at the park and in casual conversation elsewhere. This reaction has been so decided and so unanimous that I feel it should be expressed. Stripped of strong language, here it is:

Contrary to the opinion of the club's owner, the team as a whole has put up a hard fight against heavy odds. He has failed to strengthen the team—substituting guess work for sound judgment, sacrificing top-notch players at crucial times (Sewell, West, etc), and acting as manager as well as owner.

The recent berating he gave players by name in the press seems to me to have been bad policy. It appeared on the very day the team was winning its second double-header in St. Louis. That it has maintained its fierce offensive against Chicago is a tribute to its fighting spirit, despite the key weakness in batteries. Witness the protracted Bolton and Hogan fiascos and the consistent failure to bolster the pitching staff since the sale of Cronin for a quarter of a million dollars. Count the phenomenal number of hits made to win the last six games.

A team will have its slumps and its bad breaks. Against these the best investment is a strong battery and a high morale. May Clark Griffith do what lies in his power to supply both of these! May the team continue its fine fight against handicaps for which neither it nor the fans are responsible!

LOYAL FAN.

Mr. Goldschmidt's Position.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I attach a copy of a letter I have addressed to Mr. Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers of America.

DAVID ZISKIND.
Chairman, Washington Committee, American Civil Liberties Union.
Washington, July 31.

(Inclosure.)

Dear Sir:

Apparently a misunderstanding has arisen in the press concerning what Mr. Goldschmidt said at the luncheon meeting of the Washington Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union on July 29. Mr. Goldschmidt clearly stated the position of the United Federal Workers of America as one opposed to strikes and picketing.

After the speech by Mr. Goldschmidt, the meeting was thrown open to a discussion for individual expression from the various persons present. In the course of discussion, I stated my personal opinion as follows:

I recognize the position of the United Federal Workers as opposed to strikes and picketing, and I regard that position as wise. However, I feel that as a matter of theory, Government workers, as well as other workers, have a right to strike. I think that it would be wise for them to relinquish that right in certain situations, but when this is done, I believe it should be a voluntary relinquishment, and that there ought to be other agencies for arbitration and adjustment of disputes set up when any such relinquishment is made.

Fidelity Depositor.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please accept my sincere appreciation for your editorial in reference to the Fidelity Building and Loan Association. I believe if more papers would publish the facts about this association and the Treasury Department, the association would be reopened.

Why should the Comptroller's office cause the depositors a great deal more loss by continuing the closed-door policy? What the depositors would like to know is when will the Comptroller's office show them a real benefit by the closing of this institution. I am a dumb farmer, therefore I compare this association with potatoes. No farmer would throw away 90 per cent of his potatoes because he had a 10 per cent decay. DEPOSITOR.
Bethesda, Md., July 30.

An Auxiliary Airport.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Yesterday before House Military Affairs Committee, hearings were held on a bill proposing to close the Military road in Virginia, and to lease 53 acres of the Experimental Farm at Arlington for 50 years at the munificient sum of $1 per year to a private corporation known as the Washington Hoover Airport in Virginia.

This airport has been publicly condemned by the pilots who use it as a menace to life, and a major accident is expected there because of its many hazards. The hazards are the Washington Monument, Bolling Field, the bridges over the Potomac, the Naval Air Station, the tall chimneys surrounding this vicinity, the railroad, the hills of Arlington Cemetery and the fog on the river, and many others. In addition, there are floods when the river is high, the hazard of crossing Military road, and the danger from military planes in maneuvers within 3,500 feet at Bolling Field as well as the smallness of the field—only 143 acres.

To close the road and to add 53 acres from the Experimental Farm is no cure-all. The road is not the menace; the airport, not the road, should be closed.

For over four years I have been advocating a model airport for commercial purposes and for national defense on the high plateaus in Maryland between Meadows and Camp Springs, where the airport is now contemplated and will be built. I have also advocated an auxiliary airport for smaller commercial planes in the District of Columbia at the very edge of the city at Benning, where the Government now owns 100 acres of land fronting on the Anacostia River and where a sea-plane base could be built. This adjoins some 200 or more acres of land, including the race track.

If there is to be another, or auxiliary airport, it should be at Benning, where 22 taxpayers' associations have indorsed the purchase.

(Mrs.) AGNES WATERS.

Chicago's "Massacre" Verdict.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is almost impossible to believe that The Post published the editorial, "Chicago's Massacre Exposed."

In the first place, a jury of the citizens of Chicago, living right in the community itself and therefore knowing the true situation in that city, after careful deliberation returned a verdict of "justifiable homicide" in the cases of the ten men slain during the revolutionary riot in that city on last Memorial Day.

Perhaps the part of your editorial which is by far the most astounding is the reference to the members of the American Legion and what you call their "antipathy for left-wing activities." Every loyal American who believes in the maintenance of our present form of government and the continuance of our personal and religious freedom, opposing dictatorship in any form, whether it be communism or fascism, can thank God for such organizations as the American Legion and their antipathy for left-wing un-American activities.

The greatest need in this country today is for all the forces of our Government to demand and insist upon a restoration of law and order with proper respect for our Government, our laws and law-enforcing officials, and our courts. Loyal Americans throughout the entire country are becoming more insistent that their officials, who gain their power only from and with the consent of the people, enforce the law and stop further attempts to start a revolution aiming at dictatorship in this country.

J. A. HALL.
President, National Americanism Foundation.

Position Made Clear.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On Tuesday night, July 20, following a mass meeting at the Belasco Theater in support of Republican Spain sponsored by this organization, there occurred an incident outside the theater which shocked and disgusted everyone who witnessed it. We refer to the attack upon several persons associated with an antiloyalist group who were selling their papers outside the theater.

As the responsible organ of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy, we wish to express our indignation at this occurrence and to condemn those individuals who took part in it. At the same time we wish to condemn the attempt made in the letter columns of The Post of July 24 to implicate the American Friends of Spanish Democracy in the affair.

Imputations that we are not friends of democracy "in action as well as in words" will mislead few. We welcome the opportunity to state publicly that the American Friends of Spanish Democracy is a voluntary organization in whose activities all persons sympathetic with the loyalist cause are invited to participate. Its executive committee is a large and continually expanding body to which all organizations, religious, trade union, political, or otherwise, are welcomed and invited to send delegates. There is only one condition—that they sincerely support the democratic government in Spain.

BETTY WALKER, Secretary.
Executive Committee, American Friends of Spanish Democracy.

Russians On Russia.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: That "S. M." failed to heed my suggestions of July 10 there can be no doubt. Had he done as I suggested, he would have questioned the reason for and the origin of all anti-Soviet literature, and would not have swallowed the tales written by former White Guardists, the former expropriators and Fascists.

Does he know that the author of "Escape from Soviets," Tatiana Tchernavin, is the wife of a formerly rich White Guardist, who fought against the Soviets, and after the victorious Soviet revolution, the Soviets seized all his vast estates and rightfully bestowed them upon the people for people's use and enjoyment? This fact alone should convince us that Tchernavins have a very good reason to be revengeful. When "S. M." says that the latter loved their country, he is right. They loved it like Hitler and Mussolini love theirs—loved it as long as the people were willing to carry a tremendous burden saddled upon them by Tchernavins.

Of thousands of pro-Soviet books, written by Russians, I shall name only two, both of which can be obtained in the Congressional Library: "First To Go Back," by Irina Skariatina, a former Russian countess; "Science and Education in U. S. S. R." by A. P. Pinkevich.

CONRAD M. PAINE.

Jews In Palestine.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Palestine has been the dream of the orthodox Jewry for the past 4,000 years; and because of the Jews' respective loyalty and devotion to the countries in which they have been living, whether it be in peace or war times—Great Britain and the League of Nations have finally decided to reward the Jews by giving them Palestine as their "homeland." All were in favor of this plan—millions of dollars were invested, people happily migrated from other countries into Palestine and, after years of hard and earnest work and labor, the Arabs, probably incited by others, have been making protests.

This situation was certainly within the knowledge of England's great statesmen, and any breach of the "Balfour Declaration" is without a doubt a broken promise—un-American and unwarranted. The Jews have earned their rights to Palestine.

Mr. J. O. Knott's attempt in The Post's letter columns to create a false hard-feeling between the Jews and Christians is contemptible.

Allergy And Its Victims

EVERY once in a while you hear of a baby that is poisoned by cow's milk—good, clean, pasteurized milk. It gets a violent stomach upset or breaks out in a rash. It just can't take cow's milk without getting sick. Or perhaps it's your neighbor's boy who gets a runny nose and whose chest gets tight when he comes to your house and plays with your pet cat.

In cases like these, the trouble isn't with the cow's milk or with your cat; the trouble is with the baby and the boy. They don't do the usual normal thing. We say they are allergic to the thing that causes such an obnormal response, and the baby's stomach upset from milk and the boy's asthama from cat are allergies.

By the word allergy we mean to indicate a peculiar state of the body that makes it possible for ordinarily harmless substances to act in a very harmful way, and this is because, in certain people, the body cells have developed a function that is not normal. Medically, we speak of this mechanism as consisting of antibodies, but I think you will understand it better if I refer to them as magnets.

You know how a magnet attracts and holds iron. So it is with these so-called antibodies attached to certain body cells—they draw and hold certain substances to the cells.

If it is the cells of the skin that are magnetized to some foods, such as milk, then drinking milk will give symptoms in the skin, such as hives or eczema. When the cells of the lining of the nose are magnetized for pollen of some sort, then when the pollen in the air in summer is breathed in we get symptoms called hay fever. Or, if it is the lining of bronchial tubes that is magnetized—that is, allergic—then breathing the air containing the proper substance gives an attack called asthma.

I spoke of your neighbor's boy with your cat. He was allergic to cat—that is, his bronchial tubes were magnetized for cat, and breathing air with the dander from the cat produced the attack.

So it is that we find in different people magnetized cells in different parts of the body—the skin, the nose, the bronchial tubes, the stomach, even the brain, and so we have many symptoms of allergy in these different parts of the body.

Now there are innumerable substances to which people may be allergic—that is, to which cells in some part of the body may be magnetized. Practically every food may be a cause, but the commonest ones are milk, eggs, wheat, fish and chocolate. There are the pollens of flowers, grasses and weeds—the danders of animals—the dust of homes. Other people are allergic to the things they touch—to paint, varnish and lacquer, the leaves of plants, to dyes in clothes, furs and cosmetics. It has been estimated that from seven to ten people of every 100 are allergic in some way.

After a careful history and complete examination we do certain skin tests with solutions of the various foods and air-borne substances with which the child is in contact. The solution is applied to a tiny scratch on the skin or a wee bit is injected through a needle.

These tests, frequently, but not always, give us important clues to the cause of the allergy. If a child is tested with a very weak solution of cat dander and gives a reaction—that is, a good, hive-like swelling within five minutes of the test—it is practically assured that he would have asthama on contact with cat.

This, of course, holds true for other air-borne substances, such as dog and horse dander, various pollens and dusts, and for foods.

• • • •

Allergic parents should be on guard for the earliest manifestations of allergy in their offspring. In the children destined to become asthmatic, the asthma attack does not come suddenly out of a clear sky, but starts with such symptoms as stuffy or runny nose, with cough or frequent and repeated head or chest colds; sometimes with fever and a regular bronchitis, but often without this.

After this has gone on for some months, or possibly several winters, you call your doctor for what appears to be an unusually hard "cold" and he announces it is asthma.

This is the time to act. Find out the cause so you will know how to manage.

In fact, it would have been better to have acted before the first real asthmatic attack. To prevent is easier and less costly than to cure and we believe today that proper early management may prevent the onset of asthma.

The children with stuffy noses and repeated head colds, when tested out, as I have said, are frequently found to be allergic to air-borne dusts or to foods, and when known, the cause can be removed.

Covering A Yacht Race.

THE ONLY YACHT race that I ever covered was the 1920 number, between an American sailboat called the Resolute and Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock IV. This one was sailed off Sandy Hook and took 12 days from first to last, and though it was by no means the best of the series, it was by all odds the funniest. One day a sail fell down, and for two days the sea was so smooth that the skippers couldn't get the boats around the course within the time limit of six hours. They just sat out there like floundermen until quitting time and then towed home.

Old Sir Thomas was an absentee yachtsman in this case at least, his relation to his boat being the same as that of a millionaire horseman with an incorporated stable to a steed in the Kentucky Derby. He spent his time aboard an old steam yacht called the Victoria, which he had rented for the duration of the show, surrounded by a strange company of old friends and gate-crashers, and at least once an hour something would remind him of the time he landed at Castle Garden with all his possessions wrapped up in a handkerchief on a stick.

• • • •

HE ALSO TOLD a story of another Irish immigrant boy, a pal of his, who saw a diver coming up in New York Harbor and exclaimed to Lipton, "Look, Tommy; that one walked across. We could ha' done the same and saved our passage money."

The day the race ended and the ink-stained wretches of the Fourth Estate were trying to get a few words out of him, according to his old "Try, try again" formula, Sir Thomas said, "Did I ever tell ye about my little friend who saw the diver coming up out of New York Harbor?" And someone in the group patiently said, "Yes, Sir Thomas, I told you."

At this Sir John Ferguson, the London banker, a perfect example of the overbearing rudeness of the well-bred Englishman, remarked, "A gentleman never hears a story twice," and Gene Fowler, a young reporter who afterward became famous, said, "A gentleman never tells a story twice," and picked up the marbles.

There was considerable doubt as to whether Sir Thomas continued to build and finance the races of his boats out of pure sportsmanship or pure advertising genius, or an equal mixture of both. Cup sailboats are expensive, but the name of Lipton meant tea wherever tea is drunk, and when you consider the millions of dollars which are spent by the manufacturers of cigarettes and automobiles to advertise their goods the cost of a race to Lipton was small by comparison with publicity which he kicked up.

• • • •

MOREOVER, although he knew his way around socially, he always maintained his rough-diamond character, which made for popularity with the masses who drank his tea, and one day when a newsreel man was making a shot of him drinking tea on deck he purposely left his spoon in his cup and almost stabbed himself in the eye with the handle.

At this his fine-feather pal, Sir John, reached over and removed the spoon, and Sir Thomas promptly put it back again, saying, "I know what I am doing."

Not more than half a dozen people aboard the Victoria knew the score at any time, and all seemed to be out only for the boat ride and the chicken salad and tea, and Thomas himself just let them ramble around everywhere but in the staterooms, which were carefully locked, he being no fool.

He didn't trouble to introduce his guests, and may not have known them himself, but every now and again he would come down off the bridge to have a cup of tea and tell about the time he landed at Castle Garden and the boy who thought the diver had walked across.

• • • •

IT WAS a terrible boat race, too rough one day and too smooth two other days, and star journalists of Park Row had a sad time aboard a destroyer which had insufficient quarters for guests and bounced horribly the time the sea kicked up and shook the sail off one of the yachts.

That day Mr. Joseph Jefferson O'Neil, on the old World, saw a sailor flip a penny into the sea, and was told that this was intended to propitiate Neptune, so Mr. O'Neill went to the skipper's quarters and staggered to the side with a check for a million dollars.

Press and public were sick of the whole thing before it was over—a great, solemn farce between boats so fine haired that the scientists measured even the thickness of the paint on the hulls in reckoning handicaps, and it was a happy relief on the night of the last day to cover another farce, but done in hilarious mood, in which Georges Carpentier appeared to knock out Battling Levinsky for the light-heavyweight championship of the world, preparatory to the greatest sporting farce of all—the first million-dollar fight, between Dempsey and Carpentier at Jersey City.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Saratoga.

The Saratoga season is on. Saratoga is one of the few places left in America where hotels still use ropes for emergency exits. There is more fun leaving that way. And you can get bigger odds against making it.

• • • •

Saratoga and Goshen are the answers to the claim that the horse and buggy days are over. In both New York towns you can see people driving around in phaetons wondering why those pumping stations don't put in harness oil and fly nets.

• • • •

Saratoga reeks with the flavor of the good old days when there was a blacksmith in nearly every family and a grain and hay store just around every corner. Its hotels have the Civil War tone. You expect to see Jim Fisk come sliding down a banister any minute and it wouldn't surprise you to hear that Gen. Grant was buying drinks in the rathskeller.

• • • •

Here you see the rambling homes of the era when a house that didn't cover a couple of acres was considered a hovel and when no carpenter ever went 10 feet without throwing in two more turrets, bay windows or circular verandas.

• • • •

Most people go to Saratoga to see the horses but the real treat is the chandeliers, the tin bathtubs, the exposed plumbing and the hotel elevators that have the same knock in them that used to bother Chauncey Depew.

• • • •

There are hotels that have grounds as big as municipal parks and porches so vast that Lindbergh wouldn't attempt to cover them in one nonstop flight.

• • • •

The foyers and dining rooms of these old-time hotels are so large that waiters who have been there since Appomattox are still waiting to meet one another. The head waiter is really just a fellow who has charge of the routes from kitchen to table.

• • • •

For the first couple of days you squawk about the cracks in the walls, the gas fixtures and the plumbing, but by the third day you love it and go around shouting, "Down with progress! Long live the marble sink with one faucet!"

• • • •

Saratoga gets you. The race track is just Empire City, Arlington Park or New Orleans with a lorgnette, bustle and bouquet in its hair, but even a tout delivering a hot tip out of the starboard side of his mug reflects a certain Ward McAllister touch.

• • • •

What do you like in the next? And do you mean the next drink, the next race or the next whisper?

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

EIGHT WEEKS AGO I was crouching under a sudden thunder storm on the Duke of Gloucester street in Williamsburg, Va.; today I am back in London, looking at a gray sky and wind-blown dust and trees on a cold day in the middle of an English summer, trying to pick up the threads of important, or at least interesting, news to be sent to America.

Spain is still first; we still are non-intervening, although that story is getting a little threadbare. Neville Chamberlain finds comfort and cause for pride in the request of 27 nations represented on the committee that Britain should prepare a compromise plan to patch up the creaking machinery. Twenty-seven nations, look you! Wasn't it 52 nations last time, at Geneva, before the Hoare-Laval plan? We have prepared a plan, found good by most critics in London so long as the government sticks to its professed intention to secure withdrawal of volunteers before it grants belligerent rights to the rebels. Italy will not agree to this order, and it is feared by Opposition parties that the government will meet further difficulties by agreeing to the Italian proposals while it ceremonially washes its hands of the whole business.

Cheers Heard In House When Franco Captures Ship.

THE PRO-FRANCO sympathy of the government side of the House is startling. Cheers for Franco when he captures a British ship outside territorial waters, with the British navy calmly looking on, and Navy Minister Duff-Cooper, late of the army, assuring the nation that not one British sailor shall have his life put in jeopardy. Even government supporters were a little worried at reports that German and Italian heavy guns were now in position to dominate Gibraltar from both Spanish and African sides of the Straits. But we were soothed by the government statement that there was no proof of these reports, and that probably the guns were only little ones.

After Spain, Palestine. The royal commission's recommendations to solve the problem by dividing the country into a Jewish state, an Arab state and a British mandate were described by Viscount Samuel as a process of putting a Saar, a Polish Corridor, and a half a dozen Danzigs and Memels in a country the size of Wales. The government surprised the country by not forcing adoption of the plan on the House, as had been anticipated from the previous official indorsement of the proposal.

Reasons given for this retreat are that even the government found it rather ridiculous that the great and much-heralded national home for the Jews should turn out to be no bigger than an English county or the State of Delaware. And some Conservative members objected to passing the last word on the matter to the mandates commission of the League of Nations. Let us put proposals to the League, let the League tell us what it thinks, and then let the last word lie with us. So would our pride be maintained.

Quite a sizable discontent is evident among Jews here, not only against the whittling down of the national home, but against the proposal to set up yet another independent Nationalist state. They object to the trend toward small-scale nationalist isolation, and they object to putting the new state outside the British Empire.

Do-Nothing Policy Seen For Britain In China Crisis.

AFTER PALESTINE, China. British policy was quickly formed; neither Japan nor China had deliberately provoked the present crisis, Mr. Eden informed the House. This doesn't fit the facts, but it permits the government to take no side between equally guilty or equally innocent parties. It seems clearer than ever that our foreign policy is to do nothing as long as possible. The opposition in the House is unable to put forward any alternative. Even the rank and file members of the Labor members of Parliament refused to indorse the labor executives' proposal to vote against the government on its defense program as a sign of censure on official foreign policy.

Domestic affairs are just grand. Mr. Chamberlain is telling us so in a speech a week. The depressed areas are all right. Government finance is all right. Rearmament is all right. Mr. Chamberlain assures us that the housing problem is solved—except for two strongholds, the destruction of the slums and the extinction of overcrowding. So that's all right, too.

All his talk about an imminent slump is nonsense, the national government will look after us, and if there is a slump it will only be a little one. It is to be hoped that this will reassure the business world, which ungratefully doubtful at the moment. Retail trade has been slack ever since the coronation orgy, and many manufacturers are troubled by the rapidly rising costs of their raw materials.

Even the trade unions are behaving themselves. Mr. G. D. H. Cole may write his book to show that only through a united front of left wing and Liberal voters can the Conservatives ever be replaced at Westminster. But the miners have just voted not to form a united front, and have repudiated all alliance with the Communist Party. To Transport House, headquarters of the trade unions, Liberals are still anathema. So the Labor Party does its best to keep the government it dislikes in power.

Marriage Causes Bill's Passage Victory For Herbert.

PERHAPS the most notable event of the week is the passage of the marriage clause bill, which is the name we give to an easier divorce bill. Mr. A. P. H. Herbert, who loathes to be called a funster, has nursed this act through Parliament. Acts to make divorce easier in England have been passed by the Lords before now, but the House has always killed them.

When the present bill passed the House its first clause provided that no divorce should be granted, unless exceptional conditions prevailed, until five years after marriage. The Lords wanted to cut this out, but compromised on a three-year period which was thought to be the the minimum the House would accept. Not all the Lords were liberal on the subject; Lord Daryngton wrote to the Times that "if clause I is omitted from the bill there will be undoubtedly little difference between our marriage laws and those of other countries, whose customs are often deeply deplored." But the act is passed, with the three-year probation period retained.

Another notable event of the season is the enormous success of Elmer Rice's play, "Judgment Day," which is playing to packed houses at the end of July. New York did not take at all well to this play some year or so ago, but London finds it the finest melodrama, and a thoroughly plausible account of how Nazi dictatorship works.

When the judges are discussing their verdict, and the dictator's appointed judge brings in the dictator's chief bully to convince the other judges that they had better bring in the required verdict, a pleasant gray-haired lady leaned forward from the first row of the dress circle and cried, "Swine."

The play is the nearest that could be got to biting criticism of the head of a nominally friendly state, and almost openly incites to murder. It plays to packed houses.

U. S. Allots Funds To Restore Salem's Historic Wharves

Days when Salem, Mass., was the Nation's leading seaport will be commemorated in restoration of the Derby Wharf National Historic Site, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, announced yesterday.

An allotment of $110,000 of public works funds was made for the purpose. This was the first allotment made by Secretary Ickes under authority vested in him by the Congressional act known as the historical sites legislation.

Co-operation by Massachusetts, Salem, the United States Treasury, the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities and private individuals cleared the way for the Government to assist the project through the National Park Service and the PWA.

The area embraced within the restoration site includes Derby Wharf, the old Salem Custom House, the Richard Derby House and other associated properties of important historical significance.

Ground Is Broken For School Wing

Ground was broken yesterday for the $97,000 addition to the St. Anne School building at 4400 Wisconsin avenue northwest. The new addition will provide a school auditorium capable of seating 700 persons and will include four more classrooms.

Rev. Maurice King, administrator of the parish of St. Anne's Church, officiated at the ceremonies and was assisted by Father Russell Phelan, assistant pastor of the church.

Other prominent guests at the ground-breaking ceremonies were Mgr. Eugene J. Connelly, pastor of St. Peter's Church in Washington, and Congresswoman Virginia Ellis Jenckes, of Indiana.

Berlin Letter

'Der Angriff's' Anniversary.

Berlin.

THE FOURTH OF JULY, hitherto marked by the purely American celebration of Independence Day, has, by a curious coincidence, become an anniversary of an important part of the Nazi regime. Ten years ago, on July 4, 1927, Dr. Joseph Goebbels' personal newspaper, "Der Angriff," made its first appearance on the streets of Germany. Today, in celebration of this event, the "Little Doktor" published a special edition of his paper designed to review the past ten years and shed light on the coming decade.

The jubilee edition of "Der Angriff" is rather disappointing. A certain longing for the good old days of storm and strife is evident in the reminiscences of its various "Old Boys," and its predictions for the coming years fail to shed much light on the future policy of Dr. Goebbels. Its pages have changed little since the time when they were filled with bitter vituperation against the old democracy. The "Little Doktor" today continues to publish the sarcastic comments which make him feared and hated, with the difference that now they are directed chiefly against foreign criticisms of the Third Reich policies.

THE HISTORY of "Der Angriff" is a stormy and adventurous one. Founded after the Nazi Party was officially forbidden in Berlin on May 5, 1927, the newspaper chose as its motto the words, "A good attack is the best defense," and has followed this policy ever since. At the time of its founding it was announced as the "Newspaper of the German Workers' Front" and was not an official organ of the party. This differentiation must still be borne in mind—Dr. Goebbels' sayings do not always coincide with the will of the Fuehrer, and "Der Angriff" has more than once been reprimanded for the sharpness of its attack.

The "Little Doktor's" newspaper has never been very popular. It represents the most radical element in Nazi circles, along with Julius Streicher's "Sturmer," and is generally looked upon more as an evil than a blessing. Although subscribed to by most employers for their workers, it is little read and its circulation is largely enforced. In spite of its optimistic prophecies regarding its twentieth anniversary, it is doubtful whether "Der Angriff" will live to see that day.

Dr. Goebbels is also one of the hottest advocates of a German-Italian union, and his newspaper daily carries popular proof of the necessity for close co-operation between the two Fascist nations. In this he is supported by the official party paper, the "Volkischer Beobachter," and in lesser degree by the remainder of the press, which is still under his rule. However, for several reasons, popular faith in the efficacy of the "Fascist Line" is lacking.

• • • •

ONE REASON why a firm Italo-German union is improbable is that the German still does not fully trust the Italian. The German people have not forgotten, nor ever will forget that Italy broke its treaty with Germany in the World War and went over to the enemy. In spite of all assurances made by Mussolini's government, the Germans still have no faith in a pact, however binding, with the people who once betrayed them. Also, the German is well aware of the difference in temperament between himself and the Italian, and popular opinion is against a union which might force the slow and careful German to adopt the fiery and aggressive tactics of Mussolini's followers.

Then again, a certain paradoxical situation arising from the continued bitter attacks against the Church of Rome has not escaped the German eye. On the one side, the Catholic Church, with its seat in Rome, is reviled in the most libelous terms, while on the other hand, Mussolini's government, also with its seat in Rome, is seen as Germany's most potent ally. It would be difficult to reconcile these two opposing factions in the German mind, and Italy, with its large Catholic population, might well look with suspicion upon a people who seem to have such hatred for all that is sacred to them.

The talk of war which marked the days following the bombardment of the battleship Deutschland and the subsequent destruction of Almeria has died away completely from the streets of Berlin. Here again the contrast between Italian and German temperament is evident—German newspapers herald more with regret than animosity the fact that no other nation has seen fit to accept their plan for nonintervention in Spain, while the more aggressive Italian press clamors for open warfare.

• • • •

AMERICAN AFFAIRS have been occupying the German mind a great deal of late. The strike warfare waged by the C. I. O. is looked upon with incredulous dismay—the popular conception of America as the Land of Opportunity, which has persisted to this day, is being destroyed. The Communistic influence is greatly stressed, with the C. I. O. generally represented as being entirely supported by Moscow gold, and John L. Lewis a Communist chieftain paid by Stalin. The German worker, freed at least from the burden of strikes, is inclined to pity his American colleague.

The Schmeling-Braddock affair, finally and completely sidetracked by the boxing commission, has also aroused a great deal of comment in Berlin. Although the brutal fighting tactics of the Black Uhlan have prevented him from gaining any great popular favor in his home town, it was a blow to German pride to be deprived of the glory of a world's champion. There is little doubt here but that Schmeling would have won, and the ideal of American sports-on Long Island, in which two German cars finished in first and second place, has also been a source of gratification to the German. The automobile is making headway in Germany today, but the lack of raw materials is hindering its development to a great extent and technical achievements are still far in advance of practical demands. The high price of gasoline and the increasing shortage of rubber is making itself felt in spite of all attempts to motorize the nation.

Gen. Kearny

By William Lyon Phelps

A Fighting Man.

That is exactly what Gen. Philip Kearny (pronounced Karny) was, but I never knew much about him until a long and exciting biography of him was published a few weeks ago.

It is called "General Philip Kearny—Battle Soldier of Five Wars," is written by Thomas Kearny, has a preface by the distinguished historical scholar Frank Monaghan, is frequently illustrated, shod with footnotes, has over 400 pages, and is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

• • • •

Although a general, he led his troops into battle, and was never really happy unless in danger. He was killed in battle in 1862 wholly because of his personal rashness, because he could have been taken prisoner without losing a vestige of personal honor. His old friend, Gen. Robert E. Lee, sent his body back into the Union lines with characteristic grace. A letter to his wife shortly before his death shows Kearny's temperament.

"As for myself: there never was in the history of Napoleon's brightest campaigns such frequent, such desperate and such successful fighting as by my Third Division; and very much owing to what the blackguards condemn me for my 'personal rashness.' Still another word is used to define it in the French service where the lieutenant generals all display the same kind of 'rashness.' At all events it makes all troops fight irresistibly."

• • • •

The death of his little son broke his heart. Here is another letter to his wife in the same year.

"Oh dearest Agnes, except as a protection to you, how little do I care to live any longer! It is true that in times of danger I do not think of it, one way or the other; danger has been simply a habit to me. But when I drop my professional duties and turn my thoughts to you and home, oh, how sadly I am oppressed.

"Our dearest boy whom God gave us; but took away; his first smile, his last look. God knows how I suffer; and you angel much more."

This book is long but is thrilling; I am not able to judge its professional or technical details, but who can help loving old Phil Kearny? And for one, I am deeply grateful to this biographer for giving us so complete a picture of the man and of the stirring times in which he lived.

Sunrise In The Rockies.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., July 29.—You don't "catch a glimpse" of the Rocky Mountains. They're too big for that. Very simply, you see them.

I first saw the Rockies as the skies began to lighten above the road into Denver. Vast, dark blobs, they loomed like night clouds on the early-morning horizon. Then the sun came up.

TOM McCARTHY.

At first, it barely touched the highest peak with a finger of light, and then the finger, slowly, almost imperceptibly, moved down the mountainside, stripping away the blue curtain of the night. As the sun rose higher, the orange backdrop behind the mountains melted into the blue of the higher sky.

Sunrise in the Rockies is no casual thing. It is a good deal more than just the beginning of another day. It is like a performance by a master magician. It is as though a master builder were unveiling his work, pridefully, delicately and dramatically.

And there isn't much relation between a Rocky mountain sunrise and a job as a busboy in Colorado Springs but, in my case, one led to the other. It was that sunrise which made me decide to spend some time in Colorado. It was a man in the railroad station who caused me to go to Colorado Springs. And it was a gardener that gave me the idea of getting a job in a hotel.

• • • •

NIGHTS ARE COOL in Colorado and my sleeping equipment was such that I didn't want to spend the night outside. I went into the Union Station in Denver, found room on one of the benches, put my knapsack under my head and went to sleep. In a couple of hours, one of the station attendants came around to weed out the sleeping bums from the bona fide travelers who were waiting for a train.

He shook me awake and asked me where I was going. I had noticed a posting of train times and, for no particular reason save that it was one that stuck in my memory, I told him that I was going out on the 7:30 train to Colorado Springs. He looked at me for a moment and then went away. Before I went back to sleep, I saw him herding sleepy tramps through the door.

When I awoke in the morning, without any particular destination, my mind still clung to the name "Colorado Springs." I had very little idea as to what I would find there, but I decided to go there anyway.

Colorado Springs is a pretty little city, of well-cared-for houses, shady parks and green lawns in the shadow of Pike's Peak. I wandered about the town and was glad that I had come there. The next problem was to find a job, so that I could stay a few days.

I wasn't thinking of a job, however, when I rounded a turn in a mountain road, outside the city, and came to the Broadmoor Hotel. It is a large, red-roofed, rambling building, glistening white in the afternoon sunshine.

"You've got quite a plant here," I said to one of the gardeners.

"You bet we have," he said. "This is Spencer Penrose's pet."

The gardener was evidently eager to have an excuse for desisting in his labors, and he was willing to tell me about the hotel.

"This is no ordinary hotel," he said. "It started for a peculiar reason and 'Old Man' Penrose has put millions into it, just because he likes the place. According to the story, a hotel manager lost his job. He was a friend of Penrose, so the 'Old Man' built this hotel for him to manage.

"You're not looking at all the hotel right now. Not by a long shot! Back of that line of trees, he's built an artificial lake. Past that is a stable and a polo field. There's a chapel near that, built to match the hotel.

"He's a big man around here, naturally. He built the road up Pike's Peak and did a lot of things a man would be proud of, but they say he's proudest of this hotel."

I had always nursed a desire to get a "behind-the-scenes" look at the workings of a big hotel. This seemed to be the opportunity.

"Who does the hiring and the firing around here?" I asked.

"Well, if you wanted to work in the dining room, you'd see Mr. Charlie. If you want to work in the kitchen . . ."

• • • •

I WALKED DOWN a passageway which led under the hotel. Through corridors brisk with scurrying uniformed employes, I walked past the underground butcher shop, the bake shop, the flower shop and the linen rooms. I was directed up a flight of stairs and found myself in the kitchen. Long lines of shining copper kettles hung above the stoves. Cooking devices of all kinds lined one side of the room. There were huge, silvery vats for vegetables, coal fires for meats, steam cookers and gas ovens. Seemingly, every possible means of cookery was assembled along one side of the room.

The tempo of the room was almost nightmarish. Everything was speeded up to a whirling, dizzying pace. White-jacketed waiters whirled in and out of the doors which were never still. There was a constant roar of metal crashing against metal as the loaded trays were deposited in the dishwashing room. The air jingled with the mixed sounds of tinkling glass, falling silver, clinking china and the shouts of loaded waiters clearing a path with a shouted: "Coming through!"

I was almost afraid to leave my position of security along the wall and venture into that mad whirl of waiters, cooks, busboys, dishwashers and food checkers.

"Mr. Charlie around?" I had to shout above the din.

Instead of answering my question, the red-headed boy asked, "Are you looking for a job as a busboy? If you are, you came to the right place."

"Yeah," I shouted, "I'm looking for a job."

The red-headed boy stopped another white-jacketed youth and said, "Get Charlie, this fellow's looking for a job."

Charlie appeared in a few minutes and proved to be the headwaiter.

"Had any experience?" he asked.

"Sure," I told him.

"We need a boy, if we can find one that knows something about it," he said.

"I'm the fellow you're looking for," I told him.

He told me to be on the job at 11 o'clock the following morning.

As I turned away, successful in my first effort to get a job in a hotel, I wondered just what comprised the duties of a busboy.

TOMORROW: Experiences as a bus boy in a fashionable hotel.

Beaverbrook Hits Oxford Movement

London, Aug. 1 (AP).—The Evening Standard, independent newspaper owned by Lord Beaverbrook, yesterday attacked the Oxford Group movement as "exhibitionists" and called upon churches to discourage it.

Citing recent criticism of the religious group, including that of Margaret Rawlings, actress, who called it "shocking," the newspaper said the movement should be halted.

"Its methods open the door to an exhibitionist tendency which is harmful both to the individual and to the true cause of religion.

"The time has come when the churches should speak frankly to their followers about Buchmanism, making it clear they have no hope of its value and frown upon its practices. . . . The groups are not connected with Oxford University; nor are they in any sense expressive of the English attitude to religion."

Mormons to Increase In Britain, Says Clark

Rochdale, England, Aug. 1 (AP).—J. Reuben Clark, jr., former United States Undersecretary of State, today told young British Mormons that growth of the church was up to them.

Speaking to a packed town hall at the 100th anniversary of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Britain, Clark predicted the British branch would rival the United States church.

4 Scottsboro Boys Are Converted as CongregationSings

New York, Aug. 1 (AP).—The four "Scottsboro boys," recently released in Alabama's famous mass attack case after a six-year legal fight to escape death penalties "hit the trail" today in Brooklyn's biggest colored church.

A chanting, shouting congregation in Holy Trinity Baptist Church watched as the four answered the appeal of the Rev. Thomas S. Harten. Eugene Williams and Willie Roberson were "converted" for the first time. Roy Wright and Olen Montgomery joined the church.

Canada Safeguards Neutrality in Spain

Ottawa, Aug 1 (Canadian Press). Canada today acted independently to safeguard her neutrality in the Spanish civil war, banning enlistment of Canadians in Spain, specifically prohibiting export of munitions to Spain, and requiring a permit for munitions exports to any other nation.

60 Jailed in Nazi Drive on Church

Berlin, Aug. 1 (AP).—Ten more Protestant pastors and laymen were arrested last week, it was announced from pulpits today, making a total of about 60 now in jail—including the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, leader of Protestant opposition to government domination of the church.

Dortmund police revealed they had dissolved a Catholic Young Men's Association in Paderborn archdiocese and seized the association's possessions.

U.S. 4th Army in Biggest Troop Move Since War

San Luis Obispo, Calif., Aug. 1 (AP).—The greatest American troop movement since the World War was under way today in western United States when the Fourth Army took the field.

There are four field armies in the present plans for national defense. Maj. Gen. George S. Simonds, Ninth Corps Area, is commanding general of the Fourth. Peacetime strength of the unit represented in the maneuvers August 1 to 31 is 56,000 men.

Bergner Stars In Tragic Role At the Rialto

'Dreaming Lips' Affords Three Effective Roles Competently Played.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Not in any sense a "big" or pretentious picture, as present day "super-productions" go, "Dreaming Lips," presented yesterday for the first time in Washington at the Rialto Theater, still presents a semi-tragic story that affords roles of dramatic substance and some power for three foreign players of the first rank.

Adapted from Henri Bernstein's "Melo" and directed by Paul Czinner, "Dreaming Lips" has as its star the immeasurably effective Elisabeth Bergner. Miss Bergner, perhaps beyond any contemporary actress on either stage or screen, has perfected repression in both speech and action to the point of a high art. That was demonstrated first to American audiences in the picturization of "Catherine the Great" and later was emphasized in the film version of her stage success, "Escape Me Never," and in "As You Like It."

This power of suppressed emotion is stressed in the present story of the young married woman who finds herself suddenly involved in a triangular love affair which derives its dramatic conflict from the fact that her husband, convalescent from a critical illness, needs her beyond anything on earth and her only happiness lies in being with a great concert violinist. The solution of the unhappy tangle is found a little too precipitately in the cold depths of the Thames River, into which the torn young woman hurls herself.

Continuity Impaired.

That is the sum total of the play as it reveals itself upon the Rialto screen, although a close observer gathers the impression that the smooth-running continuity of the film and its logical dramatic development both have been seriously impaired by injudicious cutting and possible censorship. In its unemasculated form, the pictured events no doubt compiled a cumulative suspense and dramatic tensity that now are only suggested.

The role of the ebullient young husband, who brings his best friend, Miguel Del Vayo, the great artist, home to meet the wife with whom the virtuoso already has fallen in love at a chance and wordless meeting at his dressing-room door, is played in a high key by Romney Brent. Raymond Massey offers a more subdued and introspective study of the concert idol, who is drawn into a mesalliance he cannot resist. Attacking their roles from opposite points of view, they contribute equally effective portrayals to Miss Bergner's support. It is, nevertheless, the star who lends the drama whatever genuinely distinctive merit it may possess. Her work in this, as in other earlier films, is infallible.

Fishing for Killers.

Supporting roles of minor consequence are played adequately by a cast of English players little, if at all, known on this side. The evil effects of the film's faulty cutting are as detrimental to Paul Czinner's direction as they are to the rounded performances of the principal players.

A companion feature of the new week's bill is "Fish From Hell," an open-sea thriller of the men who battle the demons of the deep—sharks, octopuses, whales, swordfish and every other known kind of submarine killer. One of the scenes of major action depicts a battle between a whale and a swordfish, with the 600-pound swordfish vanquishing its 2,400-pound adversary. Off-screen commentary on the exciting proceedings is supplied by Wilfred Lucas, who contrived the tale and achieved some clever deceptions by skullful cutting.

The Paramount News and the French version of Walt Disney's classic "Three Little Pigs" complete the program.

Little

"Maedchen in Uniform," hailed in the season of its original release as one of the most notable films of the year, was revived at the Little Theater yesterday for a week's engagement.

With scenes laid for the most part in a girls' boarding school abroad, "Maedchen in Uniform" relates the appealingly sentimental story of a misunderstood pupil, who can find no congenial contacts among either the school's enrollment or its faculty—with one exception. The manner in which her path was ultimately smoothed by an understanding and sympathetic instructress comprises the simple movement of the play.

In the cast are many contrasting types of feminine characters, from the steely-hearted disciplinarians to the gentler woman who alone understands her charges. Among the enrollment, too, are found all of the conflicting attributes to be expected in a large assemblage of girls of an impressionable age. Out of all this has been evolved a film story that is direct, interesting and forceful.

There have been those on both sides of the Atlantic who have perceived something subtly sinister in this unembellished tale, interpreted to American audiences through the medium of superimposed English captions. As the play is presented to American audiences, there appears to these eyes to be nothing to which objection might reasonably be raised.

As an added attraction is being shown "Rain," an artistic photographic representation of the picturesqueness of rainfall in the Netherlands. This subject has never before been accorded a commercial outlet in Washington, having been included locally only in a governmental program introducing "The Plough that Broke the Plains."

The bill is completed by additional short-reel subjects and news events.

Home Again.

Mickey Rooney, with his bristling military haircut still intact, is back in Hollywood from a vacation in Twin Falls, Idaho, where he spent his time fishing, swimming and riding. He starts training in earnest for his jockey role in "Thoroughbred Don't Cry."

New Zealand Premiere of Shaw Play May Be Given By Katharine Cornell in Her Proposed World Tour

Shavian Dramas Have Been Few, American Touring Companies Fewer, in the Antipodes; Tourists Mutilate Monuments of Screen Heroes; Abbott Takes to Road Early; Notes of the Theater World.

FORTY years after its first production in England, George Bernard Shaw's "Candida" may have its first prfoessional presentation in New Zealand by Katharine Cornell, if the American actress-manager makes her contemplated world tour next year.

BELL.

Such is the surprising word that filters back to the Nation's drama desks from that investigative globe-trotter, Ray Henderson, comfortably ensconced—one hopes—in the Grand Hotel, Auckland, New Zealand, on his world-circling survey of what Miss Cornell may expect to encounter when, as and if she launches her ambitious project to expand her audience to embrace the theatergoers of all the countries on the map, or thereabouts.

Although the Shaw comedy has been acted by amateurs in New Zealand, it is Mr. Henderson's conviction, after due research, that it never has been played on the professional stage of that country. Only a few of Shaw's plays, it seems, have been acted there. "Saint Joan," also in Miss Cornell's proposed repertory, was produced in the Antipodes by Dame Sybil Thorndike, one of the most distinguished actresses of the English stage. The most recent of the Shavian dramas to be seen there professionally was "The Apple Cart."

It has been several years, Mr. Hendersn also found out, since an American company has visited New Zealand and Australia, the last one having been headed by Pauline Frederick when she was at the height of her career as a star of the cinema. It is probable, our oracle surmises, that Margaret Anglin was the last outstanding American actress, devoting her talents exclusively to the stage, to take her company to these countries. In view of this circumstance, Miss Cornell has been invited to appear in 12 New Zealand cities—get out your atlas if you thought there were not that many—Auckland, Wellington, Christchurch, Dunedin, Invercargill, Hamilton, New Plymouth, Palmerston North, Hastings, Timaru, Masterson and Waganui.

As a gratuitous gesture, Mr. Henderson reports that American-made films are to be seen in practically every picture theater in New Zealand. That, probably, would be the Harry Hunter influence, recently translated from Washington to the Antipodes by Paramount.

The screen production of Moxwell Anderson's "Winterset," produced by Guthrie McClintic, Miss Cornell's husband, on the American stage, aroused much interest. So did the screen version of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," although the only O'Neill play ever produced in New Zealand was "Anna Christie." The last play of American authorship to be staged there was "Three Men on a Horse."

If Miss Cornell should abandon her present intention of making a tour around the world, the joke will be on her. Mr. Henderson already will have had his!

In celebration of the revival of "Maedchen in Uniform" at the Little Theater this week, the management will admit as its guest the first girl or woman presenting herself in a complete, official uniform of any recognized uniformed organization. The offer will hold good throughout the run of the picture, applying to the first Girl Scout, Campfire Girl, trained nurse or any other regularly uniformed group, to reach the boxoffice each day. Incidentally, a last-minute addition to the Little's current bill was "Rain," a unique short subject, produced by a young Dutchman by the name of Joris Ivens, which depicts in an "arty," but picturesque and interesting, fashion the unusual photographic aspects of rainfall in the Netherlands.

Something ought to be done about the tourist's insatiable lust for souvenirs.

Writing from Deadwood, S. Dak., in a recent chapter of his penniless peregrinations throughout the length and breadth of these United States, Tom McCarthy, this column's itinerant office mate, remarked upon the desecration of the life-size sandstone monument to the memory of that quick-trigger gentleman of the Old West, "Wild Bill" Hickok, impersonated on the screen—with many deviations from a strict authenticity, one is given to believe—not so long ago by Gary Cooper in an item known as "The Plainsman," in which Jean Arthur was a comparably misleading and idealized "Calamity Jane." Mr. McCarthy reported that Mr. Hickok's nose, chin, trigger finger and divers and sundry other important features of his chiseled image were missing from that piece of sculpture and reposing in the collections of the souvenir-hunting vandals.

It appears that a similar catastrophe has overtaken the imposing memorial to the late Jim Fisk, also about to be revivified in celluloid by Edward Arnold in "The Toast of New York," opening with a "gilded age" premiere at RKO-Keith's on Wednesday night. I quote a self-explanatory letter from Mathilde M. Carpenter, U. S. National Museum:

"Dear sir: Reading in your column that the picture, 'The Toast of New York,' is to be shown at RKO-Keith's starting Wednesday, I thought it might be of interest to you to know that I was born in Brattleboro, Vt., where Jim Fisk lived and is buried. During my childhood I was constantly regaled with the legend, or so it seemed, of Fisk and how he met his death. His monument, very striking and a very large affair, has the figure of an angel, life-size, on each corner; on one side a bronze tablet of a steamboat and on another one of a locomotive. The angels are minus fingers, toes and other parts of their anatomies because of souvenir fiends. The monument is of beautiful Italian marble and is covered over every winter with heavy canvas to preserve it from the intense cold of Northern winters. Not having visited Brattleboro in a good many years, I have often wondered how the monument stood the march of time."

It probably has withstood the march of time better than it has the march of tourists. As in the case of the women who wear the current mode's fantastic headgear to the theater and refuse to take it off, there ought to be a law!

Harry Crosley, one of the country's foremost dancing instructors, who has enjoyed long experience on both stage and screen, has been engaged to stage the dance routines for this year's "Going Native" revue, to be staged at Loew's Capitol Theater this month, according to announcement just made by Director Gene Ford. Born of theatrical parents in London, England, Crosley himself has contributed largely to his family's renown. He began his professional career at the age of 10 and when a veteran of 15 "escaped" to America. On this side, he toured in vaudeville for several years and then graduated to musical comedy and revue, under the management of George M. Cohan, the late Flo Ziegfeld and others of the foremost producers. A knee injury suffered in Florida influenced him to become a dance director. In this capacity he has served Paramount, the Capitol Theater, New York; Lew Leslie and the Warner Brothers. He will arrive in Washington tomorrow and take up his duties with "Going Native" at once.

Foreseeing a season of unprecedented prosperity in the living theater, George Abbott, one of the more interpid of the Broadway producers, is taking time by the fetlock, as the saying doesn't go, and is sending out his road productions a full month in advance of the theoretical "opening of the season" on Labor Day.

Mr. Abbott will open his first road company in "Room Service" in the Cass Theater, Detroit, next Sunday night, with another one "prepping" for Boston later on. Next will come the road companies of his companion hit, "Brother Rat." Together these two plays are expected to carry the drama's torch to some 400-odd cities and towns between this August and next June. It is estimated that these companies will employ about 200 actors and another 200 stage hands, musicians and house attaches.

Optimism, I calls it, with "the road" supposed to be "dead."

Perplexities-of-Vacation-Planning Note.

Where does one go for a lively two-weeks-off-with-pay (I hope), now that they have removed the chief attraction of that channel dredge off Hains Point?

Is Collector.

Director Edward Cahn is collecting sixteenth and seventeenth century historical works. When he was in Europe recently he picked up three rare old volumes. Now directing "Black Lightning," his great ambition is to megaphone a historical picture.

With Love.

Eleanor Powell has purchased a new sedan which she presented to her mother, Mrs. Blanche Powell, and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Torrey. She made the presentation outside of the "Broadway Melody of 1938" set, in which she is co-starred with Robert Taylor.

Organ Soloist With New Orchestra

Varying the usual instrumentation of the modern rhythmic orchestra, Jesse Crawford has built his band, now appearing for the first time on the stage at Loew's Capitol Theater, around two Hammond electric organ consoles. He, of course, presides at one—when not swishing the rattan in front of his ensemble—and Helen Crawford at the other. Both contribute delightful solo numbers to the program. It is Mrs. Jesse Crawford (Helen) who is pictured above.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Aug. 1.—Idol Chatter: If you think Mae West's $500,000 income last year was something, you ought to hear how much England's Gracie Fields took in. Tiniest adult actress: Roberta Vale—she is just 4 feet 10 inches tall and weighs only 90 pounds. Even a new brass-buttoned yachting uniform failed to keep Frank Morgan from being seasick when he sailed his new boat to Catalina. Freddie Bartholomew's salary supports his parents, his grandparents, his two sisters and his Aunt Cissy. Look Alikes: Ernst Lubitsch and late-in-life portraits of Napoleon Bonaparte.

MAE WEST.

The gardenias that Cameraman Karl Freund sports in his lapel are gifts from his pal, the Garbo. Vinton Haworth, Ginger Rogers' handsome young uncle (by marriage), wants to change his screen name to Jack Arnold—the name of a character he made famous on the radio. Lyle Talbot used to be a professional magician—and is still full of tricks. Wonder if winning that Academy award had anything to do with Luise Rainer's uppity attitude toward visitors on her set. Tennis pros claim that Claire Trevor could be a champion with enough practice.

Do you suppose Janet Gaynor actually reads the fairy tale books on her library table—or are they just props to enhance her off-screen act? Hollywood's No. 1 gadgeteer: Bill Powell—some of the contraptions he buys make Rube Goldberg's "inventions" look sensible. Studios are required to furnish cigars and cigarettes for extras when the script calls for smoking. Owner of the longest finger nails in Hollywood: Fay Wray. Someone ought to tell Gregory Ratoff that people who pose for stars before the camera are stand-ins, not "step-ins."

You will never see Joe Delfino's name on the screen, but he is one of Hollywood's most interesting men. He is a "sound effects" genius whose job it is to design gadgets that will artificially duplicate the thousand and one noises which lend authenticity to every picture's background—the crunch of footsteps in the snow, the babble of a mountain brook, the throaty toot of a ferry boat, the patter of rain on a roof. If the director specifies a wind in a pine forest, Joe produces one contraption; if the scene calls for a gentle breeze blowing through a screened window, he can still deliver. Maybe you would like to know how to duplicate the variable roar of a pursuit plane's motor. Just take a kettle drum, tighten the head and give it a circular massage with an electric scalp vibrator. Now loosen the drum head, use two vibrators, and you will have a twin-motored bomber. And the nighbors will scurry outdoors to scan the sky.

Several weeks ago I told you about the wall of the Twentieth Century-Fox Cafe, with its painted portrait of Darryl Zanuck and its pasted-on photos of the studio's stars. Today I noticed another odd fact about that picture gallery—Jane Withers, who ranks eleventh at the box office and whose pictures make the studio a few millions every year, is not represented. But there's a life-sized picture of Shirley Temple. I wonder what Shirley's mama would say if the situation were reversed?

The lady who sits on the sidelines of every set where Paul Muni works is "my-best-friend-and-severest-critic, Mrs. Muni." And any director who has made a Muni picture will tell you that there is more truth than baloney in that description. If Mrs. Muni smiles when a scene is finished, it is okay; if she frowns, Paul is sure to demand a re-take.

Hollywood hostesses have discovered the sure-thing way to get Pat O'Brien to their parties. They just figure out an excuse to invite his little adopted daughter, Mavourneen, and Pat is certain to come barging in sooner or later—sooner if he is not working, later if he is detained at the studio. I have never seen a man more in love with a child.

Warner Comedy Hailed on Coast

Brothers Combine Gridiron Talents

Gene's advice on pigskin technics is being used for a football flicker. He also plays in the various games shown in the picture, along with two complete squads of U. S. C.'s mighty 1937-1938 football machine.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, August 1.

ART DEPARTMENT: Miss Peewee Donaldson, who graces the chorus-line at the Hollywood Restaurant, gave an exhibition of her educational prowess—and discussed all the arts, from Rembrandt to Gypsy Rose Lee . . . "Who was Leonardo Da Vinci?" she was asked. "Oh, I know that one," Miss Donaldson replied. "He had something to do with ceilings—gold. Gold, that's it" . . . "G'wan," a heckler corrected. "The guy you mean had affairs with every dame in his village" . . . "Well," replied Miss Donaldson, "is that Tin?"

★ ★ ★ ★

ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT: M-G-M has taken ads in the trade-papers, singing the praises of its new Franchot Tone picture, "Between Two Women." The ads feature a bottle of milk, and the red-inked slogan "GRADE A" . . . The picture may be Grade A—but that milk bottle is one used for Grade B.

★ ★ ★ ★

★ ★ ★ ★

MOVIES: John Monk, jr., and Fred Finklehoffe, the co-authors of "Brother Rat," arrived in Hollywood a few weeks ago, but were unimpressed by the pretense. "First I want to warn you," a veteran cautioned the youngsters, "don't you believe that line that most people out here are phonies. I don't know of a single phony here" . . . "Well maybe there are no phonies," Finklehoffe returned, "but last week I picked a guy at random, placed his finger in my ear, and s'help me—I could speak to my mother in Canada!"

★ ★ ★ ★

SCHOOL DEPARTMENT: The woes of the Minskys aren't over yet. Minsky's Gayety, which had its license revoked by Commissioner Moss, reopened with a vaudeville show—which flopped. Last week it reopened again, as a picture house. The first film featured was "Crusade Against Rackets," an "Educational" movie . . . The opening was celebrated by Mr. Esmond, of the Board of Education—who demanded, and succeeded, in getting the management to revise completely the hot, though alluring, advertising matter displayed for this educational film.

★ ★ ★ ★

DRAMA DEPARTMENT: Jackie Osterman, of the Club Mirador, entered that cafe and discovered 100 cakes of ice in front of that place . . . "Tell me," he asked the owner, "are we playing 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' or breaking in a cooling system?"

★ ★ ★ ★

FINANCE DEPARTMENT: Basil Rathbone has started a movement to bring the Theater to Hollywood. To secure enough money for that purpose, Rathbone invited a number of guests to his house, where the choicest of wines and delicacies were served—and then contributed $1,000 for that Theater Fund . . . The party, however, was not a success. There were too many quarrels among the guests—quarrels in which the guests took sides. One group insisted that the party cost Rathbone $12,000—the other, that it wasn't a penny under $15,000.

★ ★ ★ ★

BOOK DEPARTMENT: Representative Samuel Dickstein made all the front pages last week by revealing to Congress a list of Nazi spies in America . . . It may be pure coincidence, of course, but Dickstein's list is almost a copy of the appendix to "The Brown Net," published by Knight four years ago. That list is contained in pages 300 to 303.

★ ★ ★ ★

EMILY POST DEPARTMENT: The distinguished Mr. Jimmy Durante has decided to alter his ways, and is learning all the niceties of the drawing room. "And I'm takin' to readin' books, too." Mr. Durante enthused. "Good books, fancy" . . . "Tell me," he was asked, "have you read Gorky, Boccaccio or Anatole France?" . . . "Why should I read dem books," the scholarly Durante explained, "—when they're all gonna be made into movies?"

★ ★ ★ ★

WAR NEWS: Jay Allen and John Whittaker, the war correspondents, were in a cafe in Rome, discussing the revolution in Spain. "What about that Italian defeat?" Whittaker asked in a tone loud enough to be heard by the Fascist spies listening nearby . . . "What Italian defeat?" Allen returned, cautiously . . . "You know," Whittaker continued, "at Guadalajara" . . . "That was an Italian victory," Allen corrected for the benefit of any spies. "Oh, boy—did those Garibaldi Battalion loyalists take those boys!"

HELP WANTED: A Spanish war correspondent returned to his office in Paris, after securing an interview with Gen. Franco. He had been shot at by snipers and had been close to death on a number of occasions. He submitted his expense bill, but discovered a $500 deduction, with the explanation "Premium" . . . "What's this 'Premium' business?" he demanded . . . Only then was he told—that before sending him to the front, his employers had taken out a $50,000 policy on his life, with themselves as beneficiaries!

Japan Masses 30,000 Men to Drive on Chiang

100,000 Trained Chinese Wait Attack Due in 48 Hours.

garrisons that "anti-Japanese elements still are hiding in the former German and former Belgian concessions," intimating that a Japanese attack on these areas—in which scores of Americans and Europeans have their residences—may be expected.

International action was started to care for the refugees who were sleeping in the streets by thousands. Americans, British, and Germans took the lead and organized a committee to co-operate with the Salvation Army which already had a skeleton relief organization in operation.

British and American officials were co-operating closely to hasten care of the refugees and start work of cleaning up the Chinese city, where the bodies of hundreds of Chinese were bloating under a broiling August sun.

Spearhead Drives South.

Tientsin, Aug. 1 (AP).—Japan's army thrust deeper into Chinese territory today while it tightened its hold on the conquered Peiping-Tientsin area.

The Japanese asserted organized Chinese resistance around the two chief cities of North China had been crushed, and turned attention to points further south.

Along both trunk railways running southward, Japanese airplanes and infantry scouted for signs of northward movement of the Chinese central government's forces, whose appearance in the North China zone of conflict the Japanese have asserted, would mean war on a national scale.

"The crisis in North China is growing worse," declared Lieut. Gen. Kiyoshi Katsuki, Japanese commander in chief, in a broadcast to Japan tonight.

Japanese headquarters said a "peace maintenance commission" had begun administering Tientsin. It consisted of nine Chinese, but other Chinese said it was completely controlled by the Japanese military.

Japanese said a similar governing body would be inaugurated in Peiping tomorrow.

Japan Civilians in Exodus.

Tokyo, Aug. 1 (AP).—Japan was evacuating her nationals today from widely separated points in China and evidently preparing for a conflict of wide extent and long duration. Ships arriving from China were filled with homecoming refugees.

Five hundred Japanese women and children from Tsinanfu, inland capital of Shantung Province, reached Tsingtao, where they can be protected by the Japanese navy. One thousand Japanese males remained at Tsinanfu, center of Japanese economic interest and scene of a bloody Sino-Japanese clash in 1928.

In Hankow all Japanese except able-bodied males were being taken from the Japanese concession as rapidly as shipping on the Yangtze River could receive them. The Japanese community at Chungkning, on the Middle Yangtze, was moving to Hankow.

Officials indicated the empire was preparing for prolonged operations in China. Some expressed belief only complete capitulation of the Central Chinese government at Nanking would prevent a real war. Forty members of the House of Representatives adopted a resolution calling on the government to follow a stronger China policy.

War fever swept most of the empire, although Tokyo, the capital, remained calm. An Associated Press correspondent found big industrial centers, like Osaka, Nagoya and Kyo, throbbing with martial activity.

U. S. Cameraman Seized.

New York, Aug. 1 (U.P.).—Bonney Powell, 35, a cameraman for the March of Time newsreel and Life magazine, was arrested in Peiping today by Japanese soldiers, while taking photographs, an official of Time magazine said tonight. His wife and daughter also were held.

This Type Traveler Held Conservative; Easter, Labor Days Best.

When William H. Gilbert, veteran guide, steps up to a honeymooning couple and tells them he can show them the town as no one else can, they usually believe him. This couple did. His average is seven customers out of every ten prospects he tackles.

Where Pennsylvania and West Executive avenues meet is the mecca of tourists and the paradise of official guides. It is probably the most profitable sight-seeing market in the world.

Five U. S. highways No. 1, 50, 240, 211 and 29, run past the corner. It is situated between the White House and the War Department. Sooner or later, usually sooner, every visitor walks or drives by the intersection.

For the 15 guides who have stationed themselves there since its "inauguration" in 1926, it is not only a source of income; it is a liberal education.

These men, most of whom have been in the sightseeing business more than 20 years, have shown the Nation's Capital to thousands from Bound Brook, N. J.; Steamboat Springs, Colo., and points east, west, north and south. They claim they can tell a sightseer's native State after talking to him for five minutes.

Know Human Nature.

Their knowledge of human nature is almost as extensive, and probably more practical, than the average psychologist's. They may attempt to sell a tour of the city to a pipe-smoker, but they know in advance they will not be successful.

"Men who smoke pipes," one of them said yesterday, "are over-conservative. They figure they can learn more themselves in two or three days than a paid guide can teach them in a few hours. Of course, it's false economy."

Tourists from Delaware, Florida and California are the poorest prospects; those from Ohio and Pennsylvania are the best. The months between Easter and Labor Day bring the heaviest business, but the winter visitors take longer tours and tip more generously.

Many Expert Drivers.

Most of the guides are expert drivers. In fact, they consider their ability to drive more profitable than their knowledge of the city. Once they have persuaded a tourist that they can show him more than a sightseeing bus or an independent tour could, they take over the wheel and the experience which is "worth six months of school" begins.

In cases where their customers have no car, the guides use taxis. There are cab drivers who specialize in this trade. As one of the guides put it, "We like to get a driver who knows the Treasury when he sees it."

The White House guides can pick the sightseers out from other pedestrians just by the way they walk. "Tourists look at the White House; the others don't." Out-of-town motorists, of course, they distinguish by their number plates.

They are the only guides in the country who are licensed by act of Congress and probably the only ones under the jurisdiction of a municipal police department. To obtain a license, one must be a resident for over a year and produce six reputable character witnesses.

Must Pass Test.

In addition, one must pass a rigorous examination, which includes such questions as "What hour of the day did George Washington die?" and "who was the only man to witness the assassination of three Presidents?" To prepare for the examination, which varies from year to year, one reads books and asks questions of licensed guides.

Sightseers are dismally ignorant, the guides find. The most common fallacy they encounter is a firm belief that the President lives in the Capitol. Tourists are always surprised, when visiting the Smithsonian, to find Lindbergh's plane so small. And they always are thrilled to drive into the entrance of a legation and be told they are on foreign soil.

They are improving, however. William H. Gilbert, who has been in the business for 35 years and who first discovered the possibilities of the White House corner, believes visitors are now "90 per cent enlightened." He also considers that the tourist trade is increasing at the rate of 35 per cent each year.

"People are beginning to realize that Washington is a permanent world's fair," he says.

The experienced guide has perfected a technique which increases his tips and leaves his customers satisfied. He never tells them anything—he merely recalls it to their minds.

Form of Travel to Guides.

"On your left," he will say, "is the residence of Cary T. Grayson, who, you remember, is . . ."

One and all, they love their work. It's a form of travel to them. It allows them complete freedom. They work when they like. "I never could go back to work for a boss," one said.

They are conscientious about their profession, too. "It's not how much you tell a customer, it's how much he remembers," according to one. They read the newspapers in order to keep their talks up to date. And in the evening, when business is slow, they gather near the west wing of the White House and pop questions at each other, just to keep in trim.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 1.—Dividend checks totaling $57,226.35 were in the mails today for nearly 5,000 depositors of the closed Clarksburg Trust Co., of this city. E. A. Rinehart, bank receiver here, said the payment will bring to a million dollars the amount paid out since the bank closed in 1929.

182 U. S. Aviators Are Eager to Join China Air Service

Los Angeles, Aug. 1 (AP).—Mystery surrounded preparations of 182 American pilots, each of them with a mechanic or two, to sail soon for China to man combat planes.

The Times today quoted Russell L. Hearn, soldier of fortune and former general staff officer with Marshal Chang Tso Lin, as telling Dr. Tao Heng Chin, here on a lecture tour, that 182 pilots had signified their willingness to go to China and that each had his own mechanics.

Hearn said he had a report the Chinese Central government had 392 planes for which it had no pilots but declared it a violation of Federal law to recruit them here.

"However," Hearn stated, "if Americans wish to go to China and then enlist, there's nothing to stop them."

"I know nothing about recruiting Americans to assist my nation," insisted Dr. Tao. "However, if they want to go, I'm certain their services will be appreciated."

Franco's Troops Increase Gains Near Valencia

As the insurgents retreated, the dispatches said, government troops captured lines which had been called the "death trenches," because of heavy government losses in previous attempts to take them.

The government hailed this capture as proving it is "impossible for the rebels to advance on the Madrid front."

An expression of "Italian solidarity" was taken to Franco at Salamanca by the new Italian ambassador, Viola di Campalto. From the insurgents' sacrifices, the ambassador said, would come "a new Spain with which Imperial Italy can carry on a strict and close collaboration for the defense of their national interests and for the good of civilization."

The generalissimo replied that his government was "disposed to collaborate with Italy" and he put himself "personally at Italy's disposition for their common good."

2 Frenchmen Executed.

Insurgent officials reported today that two Frenchmen convicted by a military court of plotting to spread disease germs in insurgent Spain had been executed by a firing squad in Pamplona.

Louis Chabrat and Jean Boujennec were charged with aiding an international plot to spread typhoid and sleeping sickness in Gen. Francisco Franco's territory. Franco said last Friday he would notify the League of Nations and world capitals of details he had discovered and was reported to have stayed sentence to permit other nations to investigate.

Plan Appeal to League.

Valencia (Monday), Aug. 2 (U.P.).—The loyalist government announced today it would ask the League of Nations to adopt sanctions against Germany and Italy for their aid to Spanish rebels.

Stock Die in Blaze.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Aug. 1.—Fire yesterday destroyed a large barn on the farm of Russell Fisher, near Rocky Ridge, with an approximate loss of $8,000. The building was struck by lightning during a thunderstorm. In addition to the barn, Fisher lost three horses, six calves and eight hogs.

China Will Win, Wife of Chiang Tells Women

Founds Feminine Society to Comfort Nation's Defenders.

try's women and confidence in the modern army her husband has built in the last decade.

No other woman and few men are in a position to know as accurately as Mme. Chiang the true situation as it affects the nation's immediate future.

The generalissimo's wife is secretary general of the air defense commission and daily attends to the duties of that important post.

"We meet today with the nation facing the gravest crisis in its history," she told the meeting. "It is with great sorrow that we find it necessary to assemble in the shadow of war, for war is a horrible thing which means we must sacrifice a large number of our soldiers. The masses of innocent people must stand by and see a nation of wealth and resources ruthlessly destroyed.

"But sometimes it is necessary to make a supreme sacrifice for the sake of national honor.

"We have borne all the suffering that self-respecting people can possibly bear and we must unhesitatingly and with courage throw the last ounce of strength and energy in an effort for national survival.

"The fighting morale or our men at the front depends on the support those in the rear can give. We must never forget that, and we must remember always that one final national victory, regardless of how belated, will erase forever the humiliation of the days that so long crowded our calendar and remove the sorrow that for years bent our heads and bowed our hearts."

President's Naval Aide Will Leave

By Elizabeth Ford.

Did you know that it will be anchors aweigh for Capt. Paul H. Bastedo, naval aide to the President, who, this coming December, leaves Washington and his tour of shore duty to command the U. S. S. Quincy? And that Mrs. Bastedo's plans are to "keep the house open" on Whitehaven street for the captain's port calls? That the Bastedo flag will be nailed to the mast here anyway for the coming season.

The Bastedos will soon be embarking on their summer vacation, at Hot Springs, and then after that they wil go to Canada, where they have a summer cottage on wide Lake Ontario—a house that has been owned by Bastedos for generation after generation.

Did you know that Capt. Walter B. Woodson, who will leave his post as chief of staff of the United States Asiatic fleet when he puts on the gold braid of new Presidential naval aide, has a Washington background that stretches from here all the way to prewar days . . . or, if you like your dates explicit, all the way to 1911? at that time, and until 1914, he sat behind an important desk in the judge advocate general's office in the Navy Department.

Scribble in your notebook that he was graduated from Georgetown Law School, and underline, with a sweep of your pen, the fact that when he did so he stood head and shoulders above the right end of his class, with a cum laude written on his diploma.

From 1921 to 1922, the fortunes of service brought him back again to Washingon and to a new position as assistant judge advocate general. And in 1931-34 he once more held the same tour of duty.

He and Mrs. Woodson have three children—a daughter, Ruth, and two sons, Walter B. Woodson, jr., and Halford.

Right now the Woodsons are at Hingham, Mass., where they have a summer house and where they will remain until the summer is over and ear-muff weather begins in October.

Did you know that Alice Corneille and Michael Hart Cardozo, whose engagement was recently noised abroad through the land, are not now engaged—but married? And all this before the first news about them was cold from the presses.

It happened on Poughkeepsie on Saturday. The ceremony took place at the summer home of Justice W. Charles Poletti, of the New York Supreme Court, who also pronounced them Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hart Cardozo 4th.

The bridegroom is a cousin of Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo, of the United States Supreme Court . . . and the former's decision to have the marriage performed at such an early date is the quickest we've heard handed down for a long time.

And also did you realize that this gala Saturday was not all "Marsyl Stokes Day" at Newport?

Several hundred persons who were not at the flood-lighted Pahnestock mansion, or still talking about the Ranger, were gathered in the Naval Station Auditorium, where the music played late for the ball given by Rear Admiral Charles P. Snyder, U. S. N., for Vice Admiral Sidney J. Meyrick, R. N., and the officers of the British cruiser York.

Among the guests was Capt. F. C. Bradley, Naval Attache of the British Embassy, who left Washington last week to take quarters at the Viking Hotel in Newport in order to be on hand for the York celebration.

Parties Are Held For Mrs. T. F. Shuey

A number of parties have been given in Staunton, Va., or are being planned for Mrs. Theodore F. Shuey and her daughters, Miss Dorothy Shuey, of Paris, and Mrs. Charles J. Kappler, of Washington, who are visiting her for some time this summer at her home, Intervale. Accompanying Mrs. Kappler is her daughter, Miss Susanne Kappler, who was a Washington debutante last winter.

Maj. and Mrs. Oliver P. Bucher are also spending some time in Staunton while en route from Fort Monroe, Va., to Louisville, Ky., where they will visit Mrs. Bucher's brother, Charles K. Hoge. The Buchers are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wayt King and they are accompanied by their daughter, Miss Bayly Bucher, and their son, Oliver P. Bucher, jr.

Maj. Bucher plans to attend the 1937-1938 session of the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Many From Washington Visit Sulphur Springs

The Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., is proving a favorite vacation spot for Washington residents this summer and latest to join the cottage colony are Mrs. Charles Hamilton Maddox, jr., and her children, Muriel, Evelyn and Charles Maddox, jr., who have taken a cottage in South Carolina row.

Entries are being received for the annual Women's Mason and Dixon golf championship to be played at White Sulphur Springs the week of August 30-September 4. Those from Washington who will compete for the President's Trophy, won last year by Miss Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, are Mrs. Joseph Ludwin, Army and Navy Club; Mrs. Frank Royer Keefer, Chevy Chase Country Club; Mrs. Frank J. Kennedy, Indian Spring Country Club, and Mrs. C. W. Bills, Columbia Country Club.

Sisters Leave This Month for School in Switzerland

Underwood & Underwood.

The Misses Winifred and Elizabeth Pickens, who make their home with their mother, Mrs. Earl Pickens, at the Shoreham Hotel, will leave August 14 on the Champlain for Lausanne, Switzerland, where they will attend school this winter.

Oliver T. Carrs On Honeymoon

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Taylor Carr, now on a wedding tour of New England, were married last Friday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lance Kennedy, of Chevy Chase, brother-in-law of Mrs. Carr. The bride, the former Miss Dorothy Louise Peed, is the daughter of Benjamin F. Peed, and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Arthur Carr, and the late William Carr.

Officiating at the ceremony, which was performed before a background of palms, ferns, white gladiola and dahlias, was the Rev. Fred Miller, of Mount Rainier Christian Church. The bride's attendant was Mrs. Harold Lance Kennedy, her sister, and the best man was Arthur Carr, brother of the bridegroom.

Following the ceremony, which was witnesses by relatives and a few intimate friends, a reception and wedding supper was given on the lawn of Brook Farm Tea House.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Taylor Carr will live in their new home at 3715 Veazey street upon their return to Washington after August 15.

Doctor Entertained.

Sir Henry Brackenbury, of London, vice president of the British Medical Association, will be the honor guest at a luncheon today at the Mayflower. Members of the International Medical Club of Washington, of which Dh. Tomas Cajigas is president, will act as hosts.

Calendar of Club Activities for the Week

Sketching and Puppet Classes Are Started at Kamp Kahlert

Miss Lois Baldwin Instructing Art Group in Charcoal; Short Play Prepared; Life-Saving Emblems Are Awarded.

SKETCHING CLASSES have been started for the girls at Kamp Kahlert under the direction of Miss Lois Baldwin, a former Kahlert counsellor, who is now a near neighbor. The girls are working at present on life sketches done in charcoal.

Another troop has started learning the manipulatoin of puppets, with Miss Ruth Linn Fraser, program director, in charge. With the assistance of Miss Amy Veerhoff, dramatic director, a short play is being prepared for the entertainment of the camp.

Life-saving instruction is given every two weeks so each camper is afforded a chance to feel the satisfaction of earning a badge. Ten campers have received their life-saving emblems. They are: Virginia Lee Brown, Elizabeth Thomas, Helen Hughes, Ida York, Frances Heiss, Nancy Marsh, Jackie Folsom, Ethel Hayden, Jean Burnside and Nancy Childs.

Overnight Trips a Feature

Kahlert is still having its own overnight camping trips under the direction of Ruth W. Robbins, Louise Watkins and Louise Danforth. The first trip for the week will be an overnight trip in rowboats. Those going are Betty Jane Wilson, Mickey Campbell, Peggy Gresham, Anne Leavitt and Frances Heiss. Alice and Frances Holmes, Harriet Kusenberg, Lucy McNeely, Bee Hill and Marjorie Moffitt have advanced far into the art of campingg out and are now allowed to go on a two-night canoe trip.

The Wednesday Club, of 614 E street, will have Dr. Elmer Klein as guest speaker this week at 3 o'clock. Dr. Klein has been in former years in hospitals and clinics in New York, New Jersey and Baltimore, and is now engaged as a psychiatrist at the Life Adjustment Center. His address will be on "Emotions and Glands and Their Effect On the Health." Mrs. A. A. Cheney, of the E street committee, will act as hostess to the club.

Though the major portion of summer activities in the Girl Reserves are over, the boys and girls can still anticipate the dances on the roof of the Y. W. C. A. every Thursday from 8 till 11 o'clock. These dances will continue until school opens in the fall. Miss Kathryn Latimer furnishes the music for the dancing.

Bicycle Party Is Planned

A bicycle party through Potomac Park is on the program for the business and professional department of the Y. W. C. A. tomorrow. The party will meet at 7:30 and go to the Tidal Basin boathouse for bicycles. Marie Higdon, of hte Xenos Club, is in charge of arrangements. All business girls in Washington who would like to join the group have been invited to call the Y. W. C. A. and reserve a bicycle before noon tomorrow.

Another of the Y. M.-Y. W. dances will take place Friday night on the roof of the Y. W. C. A.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Can Sense of Well-Being Be Achieved by Neurotic Woman Wrestling With 'Difficult Middle Years?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Can a neurotic woman, especially one who has reached the difficult years of middle age, be helped to lead a fairly normal life? My main difficulty is that I can not mingle with friends without getting an attack of indigestion and sleeplessness. I have overcome fear of sleeplessness and rest fairly well, but I cannot overcome that inside trembling that gives me a nervous heart and indigestion.

* * * *

I am interested in current events but if I hold an animated conversation with anyone I cannot relax for hours afterward. If I invite friends to dinner I become confused and make mistakes and am ill afterward. I was under a doctor's care for two years and at the end of that time he told me I would have to resign myself to leading a quiet, secluded life, as my trouble was due to nervouness or lack of nervous energy, for which he knew no cure.

* * * *

Please do not get the impression that I am a discontented person who spends her time thinking and talking about her ails. I am quite happy as I have a good husband. We are devoted to our little home. Our hobby is gardening and we play table tennis, enjoy good movies and attend church regularly.

* * * *

I know I have an inferiority complex dating back to a tragedy in my childhood. I have been able to overcome it only to a slight extent. I shall be so grateful if you have any suggestions that might help. I have read Dr. Beran Wolfe's "Nervous Breakdown" and Basil King's "Conquest of Fear," and they were helpful. Sincerely,

A. H.

Approaches to Health.

DEAR A. H.: "The difficult years of middle life" through which you are passing are no doubt responsible for your current nervous distress. Happily, this distress can be minimized virtually out of existence through intelligent self-education and self-direction, on the one hand; and with the help of science, on the other hand. In last Friday's column, I suggested what I believe to be excellent reading matter dealing with this subject. This included an article by Maxine Davis, titled "Life Does Not End at 50," appearing in the August issue of Pictorial Review; and Dr. Marie Stopes' book, "Change of Life in Men and Women," procurable at library or bookstores.

* * * *

Functional disturbances coincident to life's transitional period in women are most often the cause of such symptoms as you describe. The thyroid, the pituitary and the ovarian glands, among others, have an interdependent chemical function to perform in keeping a woman's nervous and emotional system normally balanced. Not infrequently, however, one or the other of these glands lies down on the job, so to speak, and immediately the whole machinery of the nervous system is out of joint. The result is a dismaying and contradictory mass of symptoms, among which may be experienced mental depression, uncontrollable nervousness, draggy lethargy, sleeplessness, faulty memory, inability to concentrate, loss of weight and appetite, aversion to social life, etc., etc. Thereupon it behooves the sufferer to put herself in the hands of an expert diagnostician who can uncover the cause of the trouble and set it right by skillful medication.

* * * *

Any layman who follows the discoveries of medicine with even cursory interest has encountered, time and again, the statement of eminent authorities that there is no such ailment as "nervousness," pure and simple, for which there is no cure. Nervousness, they tell us, is symptomatic of some underlying psychic, functional or organic sickness, which in a high percentage of cases favorably responds to treatment. I suggest you ask the Physicians & Surgeons Exchange, 25 Quincy street, Chevy Chase, telephone WIsconsin 3053, for the name of a first-rate diagnostician or gynecologist. M. H.

Tuesday's Problem

"Involved in a bit of trouble and indefinitely suspended from job until cleared," man of 28 wrestles, in addtiion, with "unbearable heartbreak" brought on by the fact that his 20-year-old fiancee has recently transferred her engagement ring to the right hand and now "associates with a gin-drinking, pleasure-seeking bunch." How to regain her whole-hearted devotion and win her away from "these gin-drinkers" are some of his questions. His problem will be discussed here tomorrow.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Conversation Has Effects.

CONVERSATION is not a mental stimulus alone; it has its effects on the body.

Conversation, for instance, affects the muscles of larynx and of the hands.

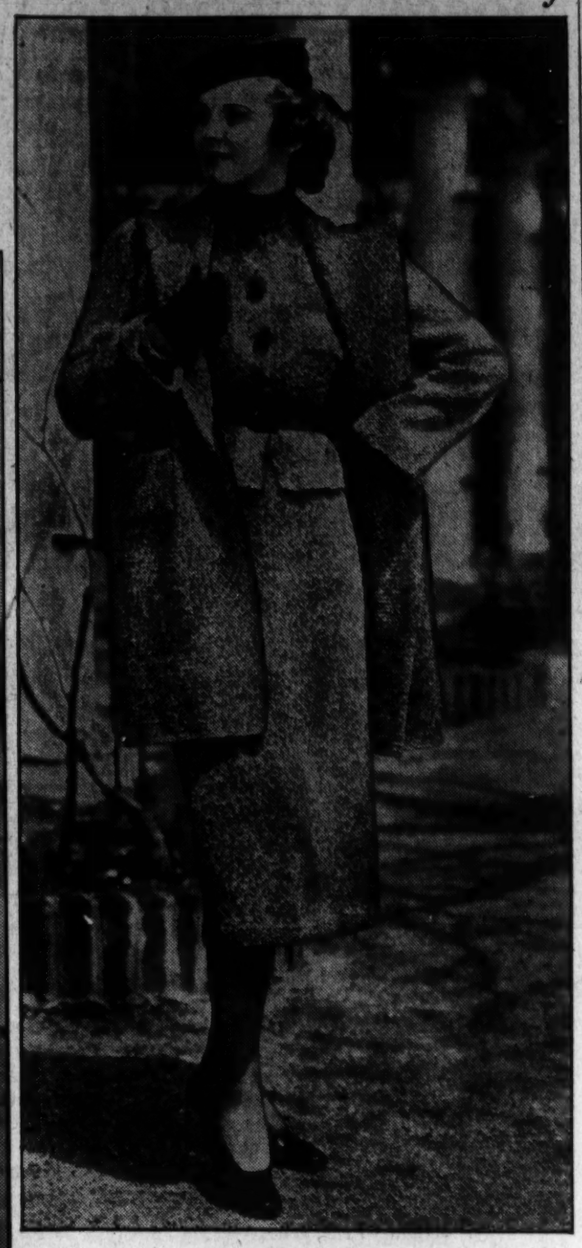
A dog's powers of conversation depend more on its long flappy tongue than on its mind. A dog understands a good deal. He can yelp demands and questions. For his other expressions, he depends on his eyes, ears, tail and all the pantomimic actions of the body. An Egyptian beggar can do no better. An Englishman can not do nearly as well. His highly flexible and intricate language has robbed him of all ability to make himself understood by facial expression or gauges, such as French and Italian, demand movements of the hands, shrugs, winks, eyebrow liftings.

In Paris the other day, watching a group of Frenchmen, my companion said, "They couldn't talk at all of you tied their hands." I asked my French chauffeur if he ever drove in Italy, and when he answered in the affirmative I asked him if he could speak Italian. He said, "Oh! pretty well, and if I don't know the words I can always use my hands."

Names, words, scraps of conversation may condition a person's whole physical life. The drivel that is put out in radio advertising for medical products is a revelation of the extent to which most people lead ignorant and fear-ridden lives, but it is also an indication of how mere words can induce people into a physical state of illness which causes them to seek many forms of physical treatment.

Two Chic Fall Costumes You Can Knit Yourself

The new knitted frocks have flared skirts as shown below. This one-piece model (number 2467) of cheviot zephyr, with the popular boat neckline and talon fastener, is as flattering to the figure as it is smart. The three-piece suit (number 2469), of heavy sports yarn, has the new style details found in smart woolen suits for fall. Note the neckline, which adapts itself to various accessory changes, and the swagger lines of topcoat. For directions, send 3-cent stamp to Ethel Ehlen, Post Fashion Editor.



Possibilities for Knitting Chic Clothes Termed Endless

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

KNITTING has ceased to depend upon fashion whims alone, it is now part of the great American design for smart wardrobes. The inherent urge of women to be individual, to be creative, has achieved success for knitted garments, and made them as necessary in the modern scheme of things as sports clothes, evening gowns and other staple costumes. With knitted clothes styled in the same way as materials, they have overcome many limitations and now appear as smart ensembles for every occasion, from the most casual type of frock or suit to formal evening wear. The new yarns and patterns are other incentives which intrigue women into knitting their own costumes. Plus these is the satisfaction of expressing their personalities and ideas through something which they make.

Knit Fashion Show.

The importance of knitting was recently emphasized in a New York fashion show, consisting entirely of knitted garments which could be duplicated by any ambitious woman. Simplicity was the keynote of the entire showing; simple tailored lines deemed the smartest, most flattering and youthful. All the designs stressed simplicity of line for the figure and simple stitches for convenience of the knitter, to enable her to complete quickly a frock or suit between the crowded hours of varied activities. Knitted clothes, like those of the numerous popular fabrics, are designed specifically for every interest in which the modern woman is actively engaged; whether it is golf, tennis, bicycling, or spectator clothes for the football or golf games.

Emulating the three-piece suits of woolen materials, sponsored by designers for fall and winter, there are striking suits of this type which can be made of yarn. These are developed in one-piece frocks topped by knuckle-length coats, and two-piece suits with the longer than fingertip length coat, which is destined to be extremely popular in the fall. Accessories, in either case, carry the burden of color contrast. Simple frocks of yarn are given a sophisticated air by dressmaker touches, such as glove stitching, kick pleats, novelty buttons, scarfs and belts, talon fasteners, ornamental clips, applied embroidery patterns. Two-piece frocks, sportive in styling, are adorned with the new high pockets (near the neckline), chic shoulder detail, unique fastenings.

New Yarns and Colors.

Outstanding yarns for fall and winter costumes are cobble crepe, zephyr, krinky crepe, cashmere and numerous other varieties of wool, and wool with silk, linen or rayon. New shades are also noted on the yarn color chart—currant red, strawberry, henna, dubonnet, brick, queen blue, dove blue, paddock green. These new yarns are carefully styled and exquisitely blended to comply with every fashion change. To get the smart square-shoulder effect, in many cases, knitted frocks are equipped with padding underneath the shoulder top. Many of the one-piece frocks have some extra stitching on the edge of the sleeve to give them the chic "squared" look. The Vionnet neckline, so popular in the midseason silk frocks, has been copied by knitted creations with good effect. Skirts swing wide or flare; pencil silhouettes are given walking freedom by kick pleats in the front of the skirt.

The possibilities for knitting chic and comfortable clothes this season are practically endless. For the ingenious woman, a new world of fashion is opened and she can be as individual and original in her combination of stitches, yarns and colors as she desires. Another interesting feature, these home-knitted costumes are not prohibitive in price and seasoned knitters maintain that it is exciting and fun to try new yarns, stitches and color combinations.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Aug. 1.

EVERY SUMMER at about this stage, nudged by my sense of duty and stung by the remnants of my prewar conscience, I take a deep breath and a sniff of smelling salts and plunge into the heart of the boardwalk at Coney Island, that astounding Sunday playground of our molden masses.

ALICE HUGHES.

For this year's expedition, I luckily picked the greatest Sabbath the island has yet known—for numbers, excitement and public outcry. Capt. John J. Martin, commanding the cops, told me that there were at least 1,100,000 people at the resort, though to me the figure seemed small. Every inch of the wide beach was filled with humans. The screams and howls of 143 lost kids brightened the day, and life guards yanked out dozens of girls who had foolhardily tried to swallow the Atlantic Ocean. Oh, it was a day on the hot sands!

But the feature of my Coney Island (only annual, thanks be!) was the spectacular drive to Keep Our Beach Clean! At the busiest hour of the afternoon 100 inspectors descended to the sand and snatched every newspaper in sight—even those on which squatters were sitting, and those others were perusing. Small riots broke out all over the beach, but papers were red rags to bulls, and the snatching went merrily on. It was all too zealous, but our beach was never so clean, and let the citizens holler all they please! It was a fair treat to see Papa explode when his funny paper was grabbed.

Until you have seen Coney Island (once) on a hot Sunday afternoon, your life isn't quite rounded out. And perhaps it's just as well, at that. The next day, of coure, I stayed in bed with ice packs on a thumping head!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I learn with faint surprise that our legendary richest girl in the world, Doris Duke Cromwell, has gone slightly commercial. Many of the orchids adorning the buzzims or belts of our dressy girls this summer come from Doris' massive estate at nearby Somerville, N. J. The Duke greenhouses were so littered with costly blooms that there was no room for green onions, and the lady decided to sell them. I learn that business is so good it seems certain that Doris can pay her way through next winter all right . . .

* * * *

The cult of the body plays a great role in our citizens' summer lives, but the soul is not entirely neglected, I find. Ethel Willits, girl evangelist, is preaching the good word right now at our Mecca Temple. It was Ethel who spread the message for 17 weeks at the Chicago Fair, in '33, furnishing Miss Sally Rand and her fans with some spiritual opposition . . .

* * * *

The other day I asked Chief Steward Biddlecombe, of the Queen Mary, about the big liner's housekeeping problems, and was rocked back on my sensible heels to learn that the maritime pride of Britain has 500,000 separate pieces in her linen closets! All of which, obviously, must be kept spandy clean. That's just one of his little frets. Then there's the cooking, and how travelers shovel it in! So I guess our lot is only moderately tough, after all . . .

* * * *

Nothing an unusual mob in Forty-third street, just off Brroadway, last week, I hurried to the spot on the chance of a stirring dog fight, but found it was just a movie star soothing her fans. Martha Raye was leaning out of her dressing-room window singing merrily to the enthralled crowd of fans and autograph-chasers in the street below. Nice of Martha, but tough on traffic!

By Alice Brooks.

FOLKS! Meet the "Dutch Twins" who find housekeeping all play and no work. You're sure to make quick work of their animated antics, embroidering them in speedy 8-to-the-inch cross stitch on a set of tea towels. You can use every color of floss you own in these seven quickly stitched motifs, for Hans and Hulda are indeed "colorful" characters! Order the pattern and make a set for your own kitchen, or another's. In pattern 5868 you will find seven motifs—one for each day of the week—averaging 5½x8 inches; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches used and color suggestions.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

The Returned Visitor.

It's so good to be home again:

Not to have to wear a Cheshire cat smile 24 hours of the day to prove I am having such a wonderful time; not to have to dig up the old charm and vivacity the moment my host heaves in sight; not to be eagerly rapturous over his early adventures selling lightning rods in Kansas, or to exhaust myself ha-ha-haing at the one about the two Esquimaux; not to have to meet the Trotters, the Speels, the Babbles and the Jitneys, or to be sparkling and entertaining when the Oxleys come to dinner.

* * * *

My, it's great to be home again:

Not to worry every time I sit down for fear I am occupying the favorite seat of the most important person in the house; not to have to smile deprecatingly as the family Angora claws my best chiffon stockings or to welcome to my lap the Great Dane fresh from his romp in the morning grass; not to have to read and reread funny papers to kiddies and not to keep getting stiffly down on all fours to be the Big Bad Wolf; not to have to spend my nights perusing "Economic Determinism and the Gold Standards," because my host recommended it or "The Pagan Wife," because my hostess was sure I'd adore it and chose it especially for the guest room.

My, it's such a relief to be home again:

Not to have to wipe my face with slick, new embroidered guest towels; not to confront constantly a strange countenance in a strange mirror; not to sleep in a bed in which no bump is familiar; not to go about speckled with lint because I can't find a clothes brush; not to wear a wrinkled dress and dirty white shoes because the maid looked too grouchy to be broached on the problem; not to watch guiltily my hostess darting in and out to salvage things of her husband that were left in my clothes closet; not to go all night with a parched throat because no drinking glass can be found in the bathroom.

It's so restful to be home again:

Not to have to trail around in evening-gown negligees to impress the servants; not to have to don snappy little sports dresses for mornings, then luncheon ensembles, then chiffons for dinner; not to have to dash to breakfast with my tongue hanging out for fear I have kept the household Mussolini waiting; not to have to walk at 9, tennis at 10, swim at 11, golf at 2, pingpong at 3, bridge at 8, chess at 11, to show what a good sport I am; not to have to go on tours to see the town bottling works or to impromptu little picnics where chiggers convene:

My, it's good to see home again:

Not to have to eat candied parsnips or pickled brains because the recipe came from Aunt Sally; not to load my plate with things I don't like so as not to offend Mrs. Grundy; not to accommodate my eating tempo exactly to that of my hosts—and their offspring—so no one need wait for dessert; not having to agree—or at least dissent tactfully—in opinions on all touchy matters; not having to act as referee in marital arguments; not to stand poised to fade out discreetly when household battles impend or bill collectors appear on the threshold.

Well, the best part of a visit is getting home again

Just stretching out in the sagging old chair that is MINE and enjoying the feel of my ole house-coat and slippers; being able to find my toothpaste and sodium bicarb in the dark and to know where every dress hangs in the closet; sitting securely with my hair in tin curlers not fearing a knock at the door and not giving a hoot if there is one; ordering ham and eggs or liver and onions or even milk toast for dinner; thinking and saying just what I please about Tom Girdler, John L. Lewis or the best way to fry chicken; being a dullard, a grouch, a fromp, a nitwit if I choose—bot above all, once again, A FREE WOMAN.

Open one large can salmon at both ends, drain off liquid and push salmon gently onto a plate. On another plate arrange the largest flakes of salmon like petals of a rose. Outside the salmon arrange thin slices from 1 cucumber, not peeled. Mix remaining salmon and cucumber, peeled and diced, with mayonnaise. Line shallow bowl with lettuce, cover with mixed salmon and cucumber and place the rose of salmon carefully on top. Garnish with watercress and a few rings of onion and put sifted hard-cooked egg yolk in the center of the rose.

Spices Lend Hues For Autumn Wear

For years feminine fashions have determined what women would eat, for style has determined the figure—and the diet. Now at last has come a great reversal. Out of the spice jars with which our food is made flavorful and fragrant has come the range of tans and browns with which the well-dressed woman will make herself alluring in the late summer and early fall season. For once, therefore, foods will determine what we wear, according to the edicts of the Nation's stylists.

Spice shades, ranging from the yellow-tan of ground ginger to the rich brown of whole cloves, are being shown in light and medium weight fabrics. Cosmetics are being tinted to harmonize with these spice colors and also, incidentally, to make the transition from suntanning to normal skin tones more gradual and more charming.

Police Club Bishops During Religious Clash.

Bob Burns Says

There ain't nobody in the world I feel sorrier for than a revengeful person. It's like the time the president of the ladies' sewing circle gave a picnic and Aunt Zeetie didn't get an invitation.

As the day approached for the picnic, Aunt Zeetie kept gettin' madder and madder and would sit for hours, tryin' to think of a way to get even. Finally, on the morning of the picnic, the president called Aunt Zeetie up and told her how sorry she was that she hadn't called her before and invited her to come on and go to the picnic. Aunt Zeetie said, "It's too late now, I've already prayed for rain!"

In thinking of the long service of Miss Harriott Daley at the Capitol switchboard, some thoughts become almost plaguing . . . First, Miss Daley has been in the switchboard room since 1898 (in that year she was the sole operator and there were only 51 stations on the board) . . . Now she is chief operator, supervising 37 persons attending to calls from 1,200 extensions . . . This is the thought: What an interesting story she could write . . . She could tell what she suspects to have been the most important call that came through the board in those years (the imperative calls that must have been rushed through in the war days . . . And she might try to estimate the tremendous number of calls that she has either handled herself or has supervised . . . She must have a lot of interesting recollections, since she is in the top telephone spot in the Nation . . .

Chinatown seethes with war excitement. A mass meeting held by Washington Chinese yesterday cheered and raised funds, just as American white brothers did in 1917.

T. Y. Hu exhorts his listeners to buy airplanes and bandages for fellow countrymen fighting the Japanese in the homeland. Moy Chock, chairman of the meeting, is in the background.

Rumblings of war in China echoed here yesterday when 300 Washington Chinese rallied in Chinatown and, in a burst of patriotism, gave their savings to support the Nanking government in its present emergency.

In a room draped with flags and streamers, patriotic citizens contributed over $500 on the first day of a campaign in this country to help swell China's war chest for what Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek assures the Chinese people will be a major conflict with Japan.

All week, Chinese newspaper extras and war posters have aroused the spirits of local Chinese. Behind lowered shades, over cups of tea, there has been talk of guns, planes and flashing swords, as fighting has raged in Peiping and Tientsin. Resident Chinese, almost all of whom have left their families in the homeland, are tense over the impending crisis.

Dignified Moy Chock, head of the local branch of the Chinese Nationalist Party, was chairman at the meeting yesterday, under the auspices of the newly formed League Against Japanese Aggression, which is made up of nine leading Chinese societies in the District of Columbia.

A speaker with Communist sympathies almost broke up the meeting, and promise of support from a representative of the League Against War and Fascism was received quietly. But Chinese passivity gave way to frenzied emotion before inspired appeals by local and student speakers.

Speakers, including W. P. Chai, a young student from the University of Illinois, stressed the need for unity and voiced the confidence of Chinese in the ability of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek to conduct a war against Japan that will bring ultimate victory though it is necessary to fight "to the mitter end." J. C. Shieh, president of the Chinese Student Club, told of a student voote of confidence telegraphed to China's leader.

Stephen Pan, vigorous young committeeman of the recently organized league, outlined the plan for individual contributions from 15,000 Chinese throughout this country to support the Central government. A total of $200,000 will make possible a program for buying planes and medical supplies to ship to China.

Of the 700 Chinese in Washington practically all are Cantonese, from a section of the country farthest removed from the battle front, but all have pledged their support to the Nationalist government in Nanking.

'Fair Trade' Rider Delays D. C. Tax Act

Roosevelt Opposes Provision Tacked on by Tydings.

The House tomorrow will take up the new District tax bill, a measure designed to collect $9,000,000 more a year from local citizens. However, the members of the House are less concerned about the tax bill than about the rider tacked on by Senator Millard Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, because he could get action on it no other way.

Generally referred to as a "fair trade practices" bill, the rider would prohibit sale of articles below cost which are used by some merchants to entice customers into their establishments in the hope that they will buy other articles. President Roosevelt is opposed to the rider in its present form.

Delay Appears Likely.

The tax bill, its controversial features ironed out by Senate and House conferees, is now ready for final approval. But first it must be untangled from the Tydings rider, which makes delay probable. The operation might be performed by sending the whole thing back to conference with the necessary instructions.

Representative Vincent L. Palmisano (Democrat), Maryland, chairman of the House District Committee, will file the conference report on the bill today. Under the rules, such a report must lie over for 24 hours before it may be considered.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen has announced that, even "though we go to jail for it," he and his colleagues are determined to use $75,000 earmarked for other purposes in order to collect the new taxes.

Hazen said the assessor needs 25 new clerks to do extra work created by the tax bill. They will be needed, he said, to ferret out personal property tax delinquents and compute the new gross receipts and automobile weight taxes.

The Commissioners are forbidden to incur a deficit, but it is believed their hiring of extra clerks will be condoned until Congress passes a deficiency appropriation to cover the expense.

Hazen said there was little chance of such an appropriation being passed by the present session of Congress at this late date

Motor Official Calls Md. Road Body Wasteful

Cleveland Assails Delay in Completing Highway Projects.

Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District of Columbia Motor Club, American Automobile Association, yesterday, charged the Maryland State Roads Commission with "waste and delay" in failing to complete several highway projects in the Metropolitan area.

Money spent on the Jones Mill Road project, designed to connect units one and three of the Beach drive, "is just so much of the taxpayers' funds poured down a rat hole," he charged.

"We are concerned only with an effort to see that motorists of Montgomery County get a dollars worth of roads for every dollar paid in special motor taxes," Cleveland stated.

Accusations of inefficiency on the part of the roads commission were first made by Cleveland last week, when he charged that the 2½-mile Willard Highway near Poolesville, in upper Montgomery County, was being repaired at a cost of $16,000 to serve two houses and one tenant building.

Cleveland said the projects which have not been completed include, the Kensington overpass, Viers Mill road, Connecticut avenue north of the District Line, Eastwood avenue, Old Georgetown road and Jones Mill road.

"Our position in this matter," he said "is that the road needs are not being met, although all evidence points to the fact that the necessary funds are available. This is the sole issue and the State roads commission has not given a satisfactory explanation on this point."

Incendiary Blamed For $5,000 Va. Fire

A fire near Annandale, Va., believed to have been of incendiary origin, last night destroyed a barn, two trucks, a new tractor and an automobile belonging to Colin Anderson. Damage was estimated at $5,000. Theory the fire was of incendiary origin was advanced by Mrs. Anderson, who said she saw a dilapidated truck drive past the barn toward some woods and return shortly before the fire was discovered. The Andersons said they heard an explosion and ran out to see the barn in flames.

The barn, situated on a high hill near the Lee-Jackson highway a mile south of Annandale, attracted hundreds of motorists, and the road was so jammed with automobiles the Fairfax County Fire Squad was prevented from reaching the fire.

U. S. Ex-Consul Dies, Served in Dewey Fleet

Paddock, a Californian, was an engineer with Admiral Dewey's fleet in the Spanish-American War with the rank of lieutenant commander. He later entered the consular service and served at Amoy until ill health forced him to resign in 1908. Since then he had been in the insurance business in Hongkong.

Colored Man Is Sought As Kidnaper of Girl

Chief of Police Ed Smith declared the colored man, a discharged employe of the Serio girl's father, disappeared about the time she left home Wednesday night.

Charts of Burned Ship Drawn For Federal Board of Inquiry

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 1.—Office workers for the Chesapeake Steamship Co. worked all day today to prepare charts and plans of the burned steamer City of Baltimore for presentation to the Federal Inquiry Board, investigating the fire which killed three persons aboard the ship.

The body of a third man killed was identified today as Cy Haynie, an oiler in the ship's engine room. The body was found floating about 50 feet from the hull of the ship, grounded after she caught fire Thursday night.

The plans are to be presented to the board tomorrow. C. J. Blake, first officer of the Baltimore-Norfolk-Washington steamer, was unable to answer the board's questions yesterday about the location of the fire main outlets on the ship. The board asked a plan showing these.

Blake also said he could not recall how many of the crew were rated as able-bodied seamen and the board asked that a list of them be prepared.

After questioning Blake about the location of various items in the cargo, the board asked a stowage plan, showing where each consignment was placed in the ship.

The engineer officers of the boat have not yet appeared before the board. Blake said yesterday that he ran a fire hose to "where smoke was coming from the galley skylight," but that no water came out of the hose although he worked the valve "frantically."

Capt. Charles O. Brooks, master of the vessel, also said he "couldn't say" he saw water coming from any of the hose lines.

Father Fleishell Is Transferred to HolyNameCollege

The Rev. Remigius Fleishell, F. M., procurator of St. Bonaventure College, near Rochester, N. Y., has been transferred to Holy Name College, Sixteenth and Shepherd streets northeast, where, beginning this month, he will serve in the same capacity.

Father Fleishell is a native of Washington, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Fleishell. He was graduated from St. Bonaventure 12 years ago.

Following his ordination, his first position was with a small parish in New Jersey. During the more than ten years he has been procurator for St. Bonaventure he continued to work in nearby parishes.

Father Fleishell is the brother of Mrs. E. A. Sholl and Mrs. Thomas J. Burke, of Washington; Mrs. William Dahl, of Silver Spring, Md., and George Fleishell, of Washington.

2 Women, Man Held On White Slave Charge

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 1.—Charged with violations of the Mann act, three Clarksburg residents today were held in the Marion County Jail at Fairmont to await August Federal grand jury action here.

They are Patricia and Tony Tassone and Ruth Clark, who were unable to give bond of $2,500 each fixed by United States Commissioner L. J. Eddy at a hearing at Fairmont.

Miss Lillian Grey, alias Margaret Carter, who brought the charges, was held as a material witness.

Wife Ends Her Life In Necktie Noose

San Francisco, Aug. 1 (AP).—Socially prominent Mrs. Emily Cressy Player, 45, was found dead in the basement of her home today, hanged by a noose made from four of her husband's silk neckties.

Her death, which Deputy Coroner M. J. Brown described as a suicide, came on the eve of a scheduled court appearance in a divorce battle with Dr. Lionel Paget Player, rich San Francisco physician.

Brown said he found this farewell note to her husband:

"Darling, I can't live without you. My spirit will always be beside you. Divide my alimony each month between our children. I love you too much. Babe."

Geneva, Aug. 1 (AP).—Fernand Maurette, 59, assistant director of the International Labor Office, died today after a brief illness.

Va. Mail Men Keep J. W. Lee As President

Newport News Chosen for Next Year's Convention.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 1.—J. W. Lee, of Newport News, was re-elected president of the Virginia State Association of Letter Carriers at the final session of the group's fourteenth annual convention today.

It was decided to hold next year's convention at Newport News on the Saturday and Sunday before Labor Day.

Other officers re-elected were H. C. Manuel, of Winchester, vice president; H. H. Scott, of Richmond, secretary, and W. W. Selden, Norfolk, treasurer. W. P. Mahanes, Lynchburg, was elected delegate at large.

Mahanes was named to represent the State Association at the national convention at Kansas City, Mo., on Labor Day; M. F. Gibson, of Portsmouth; T. K. Anderson, of Hampton, and D. P. Daniel, of Roanoke, were elected to the association's executive board.

The officers were installed by John F. Morgan, secretary of the national association executive board, assisted by Milton Hughes, of Norfolk.

Morgan reviewed the legislative program adopted by the Cleveland convention and spoke of progress made by the association in the past 25 years. He emphasized as necessary for the welfare of the carrier service the longevity pay bill, substitute carriers bill, provisions for optional retirement after 30 years of service, village carrier legislation and the proposed "court of appeals" for settling grievances.

Building Gain Shown.

Waynesboro, Pa., Aug. 1.—Building operations for the period ended yesterday showed a marked increase over figures of a year ago in the Waynesboro section, according to reports compiled by building contractors. It is estimated that $60,000 was expended in building operations for the period ended July 31.

Senator Subdues Parking Problem, But Not Entirely

Senator James Pope, of Idaho, solved his parking problems when he went to the ball game at Griffith Stadium yesterday, but for a time it looked as though he had made a mistake.

Pope asked a colored man to park the auto for him and to return it at the end of the game, but when Pope left the stadium, neither car nor man could be found.

The Senator went to police and reported the machine stolen. The colored man later went to the Senator's home, where it developed there had been a misunderstanding about the place at which they were to have met. Police quit looking for the car.

D. C. Man Vanishes On Way to Links

Wheate, who only weighs 105 pounds, left home about 1 yesterday afternoon for the golf course, according to a report given police by his sister, Mrs. Constance Klein, 44 New York avenue northwest.

Mrs. Klein said her brother suffers stomach cramps, which have been known on occasion to cause him to collapse. She said she feared he had become overcome on the golf course.

Wheate, who is married and the father of one son, is 5 feet 10 inches tall. He was wearing brown trousers and shoes, a blue shirt and a white cap.

Klan Rallies Protest 'Alien Labor Agitation'

Atlanta, Aug. 1 (AP).—J. A. Colescott, chief of staff in the Ku Klux Klan, said today a series of Klan meetings over the nation is expected as a protest against "alien labor agitation."

What the Klan official described as the first of these demonstrations was held here last night when klansmen and klanswomen paraded in full regalia in the flare of a fiery cross. Klansmen said representatives from other States were here to lay plans for a "national klan mobilization to crusade against un-Americanism."

Songs of Sea Birds In Bay of Fundy Recorded by Radio

Quincy, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—The first recording of bird sounds by radio was reported here via short wave radio today by W. A. O. Gross, director of the Bowdoin College scientific station on Kents Island, in the Bay of Fundy, Canada.

The warblings of several species of birds whose songs, Gross said, never before were recorded for ornithologists, were transmitted from field microphones set up at Kents Island to a Cornell University sound truck at Grand Manan Island, New Brunswick.

Kents Island is home to such far-flying sea birds as Mother Carey's chickens and the petrel. The northern raven also rests there.

JACOBS LOSES IN DEBUT; TRIBE WALLOPS NATS, 11-2

The Washington Post Sports

14 WASHINGTON: MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 1937 X ****

Title Fight With Sarron Boys' Goal

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Joey Archibald, the half-pint puncher from Providence, and Lou Gevinson, Washington's reigning ring idol, square off in the battle pit at Griffith Stadium tonight in a match that will alter to a great extent the fistic futures of both gladiators.

A bout with Petey Sarron for the world featherweight championship awaits the winner of the ten-round duel. Defeat means partial eclipse, at least, for the vanquished. This set-up augurs well for one of the fiercest brawls since the sport was legalized here.

Odds on the outcome, once a fat 3 to 1 on Archibald, are slimmer than a canary's ankle, but with the same little man regarded as the ultimate victor. Precious little Archibald money is in sight, however, while Gevinson's supporters have rallied to his cause with a surprising flourish of greenbacks.

Gevinson must make 126 pounds at 2 o'clock this afternoon, when the contenders step on the scales, but is expected to meet the requirement with little effort. He scaled 126 pounds before working out Saturday, and after drying out last night and this morning should weigh about 125 pounds.

Both Are Confident.

At no time has the local entrant been hard pressed to shed poundage. Eating normally and drinking as much water as customary, he kept his weight around 127 during the entire training period for the fight, and should enter the ring at the peak of condition.

Both principals are confident of winning, and downright certain the affair will not go the scheduled distance. Matt Twomey, Gevinson's pilot, predicts a knockout for his charge within five rounds. Lou himself is non-committal. He'll report for work at the Treasury Department this morning, as usual, use his lunch-hour to weigh-in, and later in the afternoon eat a big meal and take a long nap. This is his customary procedure.

"Evil Eye" Finkel, making personal appearances in all sports departments for Al Weill, Archibald's manager, used four fingers to indicate his opinion of when firing will cease tonight.

Just Another Fighter.

"And it's a cinch for 'im," he added, nodding toward the smiling midget mauler. Archibald, as unconcerned as the Eskimos about the French national debt, merely shrugged his shoulders and called it just another fight. Gevinson, to him, is just another fighter, and he expects to beat him.

The bout will be an anti-climax to Gevinson's sensational professional career as well as the turning point in his opponent's steady upward climb. The Washington youth has sky-rocketed to national recognition within the brief span of nine months and with only five pro bouts. If he should win and get a crack at Sarron's regal physiognomy, the match will mark the culmination of one of the shortest climbs to the heights in ring history.

Archibald, a veteran campaigner, decisioned Buddy Grimes, Norfolk veteran, in his first appearance here, then in succession knocked out Larry Gunn, Ray Ingram, Nicky Jerome and Harry Gentile. His victory over Ingram, eighth ranking featherweight, was one of the most stunning upsets ever scored in a local ring.

Both in Good Shape.

Both boys are in the proverbial pink for the engagement, and ready to shoot the works. It is no secret that neither will be satisfied with a decision. They want to win by a knockout.

Archibald, banking on his greater experience, probably will wait for his opponent to come to him, although he has demonstrated his prowess at leading as well as counter-punching. His defense will be the dynamite lurking in either fist, and his attack a wide-open, one-two offensive aimed at the body.

The Rhode Islander's style is particularly pleasing to Gevinson, a sharp shooter who does not depend wholly on his left hand for results. Lou is hooking and jabbing with the right in approved fashion, and if Archibald insists on mixing too much, may surprise with this newly found weapon.

A representative supporting card has been arranged with Irish Johnny Dean meeting Al Dunbar in the eight-round semifinal. Jimmy Fox, a Lynchburg, Va., importation, mixes with Johnny Campo in another eight, and the following lads will have it out in four rounders: George Abrams vs. Charlie Rondo; Carroll Dell vs. Sam Bacala, and Johnny Cooper vs. Willie McBride.

Cubs Defeat Giants, 5-4; Take Series

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—Climaxing an uphill rally with George (Tucker) Stainback's pinch single when the bases were loaded in the eleventh inning, the Chicago Cubs defeated the New York Giants, 5 to 4, in an overtime game today before 30,326. The triumph swept the three-game series for the Chicagoans and increased their league lead to six full games.

Larry French, who pitched four hitless and runless relief innings after succeeding the veteran Charley Root, received credit for his season's ninth victory and his fifth in succession. Root retired for a pinch hitter in the home seventh, trailing 4-3 as a result of the homer barrage, which scored all the Giant runs.

The Cubs tagged Cliff Melton for 12 hits, doubling the Giants' total, but were stymied by four double plays. They picked up their first run on a pass and singles by Root and Stan Hack in the third inning, another on a pass and Gabby Hartnett's double in the fourth, and the third on singles by Rip Collins, Frank Demaree and Hartnett in the sixth. They finally caught the Giants in the eighth when Hack singled, Collins sacrificed, and Demaree single through Blondy Ryan.

Herman walked to open the winning eleventh and after Hartnett flied out scooted to third on Jurges' single. The Giants' board of strategy decreed an intentional pass to Joe Marty to fill the bases, bringing in Stainback to bat for French and end the game.

America's Cup Yachts Set for Second Trials

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

The maneuver, for sail-stretching purposes, taken during the first day's lull in the sixteenth series for the classic America's Cup, was typical of the man who is handling the defense of the "Old Mug" for the third consecutive time and doing pretty well at it, on the basis of the initial licking he handed Thomas O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour II in light weather off these shores yesterday.

Vanderbilt's activity, his manifest concern to check up on the minutest details aboard the sloop he built himself for this year's big yacht duel, contrasted with Sopwith's calm inactivity. The British sportsman kept his sloop at anchorage throughout the day in Brenton Cove, refused to concede anything more than the loss of the first race and indicated confidence in the ability of his boat to make it a different story in the second race tomorrow, scheduled over a triangular 30-mile course.

Anyone who had not observed yesterday's rout, during which Ranger whipped Endeavour at all points of sailing, might have supposed the American sportsman was the vanquished individual, rather than the victor, and thereby determined to leave nothing undone to bring about more favorable results.

Ranger Is Favored.

To the inexperienced as well as the expert onlooker, there appeared little doubt that Ranger and Vanderbilt, with their combined resources, had the challenger at their mercy, barring mishaps.

Thames street bookmakers tonight offered even money that Ranger would take four straight and thereby settle the outcome. They had their fingers crossed, because things can take sudden and unexpected turns on the high seas, but their views coincided with the belief of experts that it's now only a question of finishing out the series, so far as the defender is concerned.

Sopwith may have taken heart from the fact that at this time three years ago the tables were exactly reversed, with his first Endeavour conceded to be much the better boat and holding the upper hand. The No. 1 answer to this thought, however, among observers, is that Vanderbilt is not the kind of a fellow to make mistakes, before, during or after a race.

Dusk Halts Net Play of Latona And Bradley

Red-haired Bob Bradley, former Harvard University star, and darkness teamed to keep fourth-seeded Tony Latona from becoming the first player to advance into the fourth round of the second renewal of the Middle Atlantic men's singles championship yesterday on the Edgemoor Club courts, in Edgemoor, Md.

Latona had won the first set, 6—2, when he bowed in the second set, 9—7, as he was forced into costly errors. After trailing 3—1 in the final set, the former Western High School athlete rallied to tie games at 4-all just before darkness forced postponement of the match. Play will be continued today at 3 p. m., starting from the beginning of the third set, each having one set to his credit.

Playing for The Washington Post Trophy and the title won last year by Gilbert Hunt, who did not enter to defend his crown, Latona was joined in the third round by Billy Turner, junior player; Lieut. Stanley K. Robinson, Army player, and Hubert Simmons, of Harrisburg, Pa. Pa.

Latona and Bradley took the court to play their third-round match after each had reached that round with a minimum of trouble. Latona won by default from John Bruns in the second round after drawing a first-round bye, and Bradley eliminated Buddy Adair in straight sets in his second-round match, 6—3, 7—5.

Feller Strikes Out 9, Permits Only 7 Hits

By Shirley Povich.

Young Jacobs and the Nats' notions of winning the game faded from the scene in the fourth inning when Cleveland's Indians got a four-run start on an 11-2 victory.

But for three innings, the green kid had conjured among the 24,000 visions of a startling upset as he matched the scoreless pitching of Feller. The picture of a raw rookie with his ill-fitting cap askew, young Jacobs was strangely effective out there against Feller.

And then he bumped into the fourth inning. Five consecutive singles rocketed off the Cleveland bats, and four runs came clattering home. Jacobs weathered the inning, but Cleveland had the ball game. Manager Bucky Harris didn't send him back to the mound in the fifth.

Feller in Great Form.

But young Jacobs was foredoomed, anyway. Because the Feller boy was something of a superpitcher yesterday, zooming his fast ball into the mitt of Frankie Pytlak with a zip that found the Nats merely pawing the air with their bats for the most part.

In the first three innings, when Feller struck out five Nats, Joe Kuhel was the only Washington athlete to get more than a loud foul off the young strikeout king. Kuhel singled to right and was nipped at second base by Weatherly's throw when he absurdly attempted to make the hit good for two bases.

Washington fans, who had observed Feller in previous outings only in relief roles, learned to respect the lad's reputation as a strike-out king when he fanned all three Washington hitters to face him in the third inning. He added two strikeouts in the fourth and two more in the ninth to bring his total to nine for the game.

Nats Get Seven Hits.

He served up only seven hits to the Nats and one of the two runs they scored was the gift of Feller himself when he walked Buddy Myer with the bases full in the ninth. But he ended the game with a flourish, striking out Pinch Hitters Wes Ferrell and Freddie Sington.

But the ball game, one-sided as it developed, was not without its moments. There was great to do among the rightfield customers in the sixth inning when Umpire Harry Geisel at first base called Al Simmons out on a ball hit to Second Baseman Hughes, and a mild pop bottle barrage was launched.

Two poorly aimed bottles came hurtling out of the upper stands toward Geisel, missing him by 40 feet. Geisel delayed the game and a half dozen gendarmes trotted on the field and looked darkly toward the fans in the upper deck. It wasn't very exciting.

First Pitch for Hit.

Young Jacobs, who hurled three no-hit games in the Virginia College League last spring, realized right off the bat that he was in the big leagues yesterday. Lyn Lary, a hard-bitten big leaguer, slapped Jacobs' first pitch into center field for a two-bagger.

Whereupon, obviously unsettled by this sudden attack, Jacobs unleashed a wild pitch over Millies' upstretched mitt, and Lary galloped to third with none as yet out.

"Warm up another pitcher," shouted the grandstand managers, and apparently they had cause. Rookie Jacobs was acting very rookie-like out there at the time. And then he began to act like a big leaguer. He forced Hughes to ground to Lewis, and Lary was out at the plate. The next five hitters he retired in order.

Pytlak Gets Two-bagger.

Frankie Pytlak belted one of Jacob's curves for a two-bagger to start the third and the grandstand managers pleaded for Harris to give the rookie the hook, but they cheered him as he put down the threat by fanning Feller and Lary and retiring Hughes on a loft to Simmons.

But there was no escape for Jacobs in the fourth. He got Averill out on a fly to Almada, but he encountered a long delay in getting the rest of the side out. Trosky rapped a tame single through the box, Solters beat out a single to Travis, Weatherly pumped a double to right, Hale rammed a single past Jacobs' ear and Pytlak thumped a single to center to drive in the fourth run of the inning.

Ed Linke was in there pitching when the Indians came up with four more runs in the sixth to make it 8 to 1. They crowded five hits into the inning and Buddy Myer helped 'em along with a damaging muff of Almeda's throw from centerfield, which permitted one run to score and put another in scoring position.

Ken Chase, Harris' fourth pitcher, held the Indians in check for two innings and then gave up three runs in the ninth. The Indians performed the feat of making those three runs on one hit—Hale's single—but they had the help of two walks issued by Chase and his wild throw to the plate on a bunt by Pytlak.

Against Feller, the Nats were never in the ball game. Kuhel's single stood as their lone hit until the fourth when Travis and Simmons rapped out a pair of useless singles—useless because with the bases full, Feller upped and fanned Kuhel.

The Nats came up with a run in the fifth when Millies singled with one out, but it was a gift affair. Feller ushered Millies to second with a balk and after Millies had held up at third on Almada's single, Weatherly heaved the ball wide of the plate and Millies trotted home on the error.

Washington rang a loud false alarm in the ninth against what appeared to be a rapidly-tiring pitcher. They filled the bases with one out when Hughes muffed Simmons' hard-hit ball and Stone and Kuhel followed with singles. Feller, with his third pass of the game, forced Simmons home but he was back in stride right after that, fanning Pinch Hitters Wes Ferrell and Sington just like that.

Ft. Myer Riders Win in Finals

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 1.—A hard riding Third Cavalry polo team of Fort Myer defeated the Maryland Polo Club in the finals of the Southeastern intracircuit tournament today at Stevenson before the largest crowd that ever witnessed a match here. The score was 9 to 8, and an extra chukker was necessary to settle supremacy.

Zimmerman, Landick Win in Manor Play

With a net score of 66, Maj. J. W. Zimmerman and his partner, George Landick, jr., won the Blind Partner Tournament yesterday at the Manor Club, defeating T. Z. Dennis and partner, W. E. McCreery, by two strokes.

Low gross was posted by Bob Brownell and W. La Bille, who shot 154. Max Taylor and T. N. Trezise were second with 156.

Leo Walper's 289 Tops Good Field to Win Middle Atlantic Pro Title

Circus? Yes, But Joe Public Likes It!

By Shirley yPovich.

Sure, it was circus stuff that the old ringmaster, Clarke Griffith, served up to the folks at Griffith Stadium yesterday when he unveiled green, young Bucky Jacobs as Washington's pitching challenge to Cleveland's famed Bob Feller. But I would say that the squawkers are out of order.

POVICH.

True, Griffith virtually conceded defeat when he sent his raw rookie out there to pitch against Feller, but that crowd of 24,000, the third largest of the season at Griffith Stadium, was a powerful argument that Griffith's act was popular despite the bleating of hard-bitten fans.

* * * *

"Griffith's Folly," the carpers called it, muttering that the Nats' owner was seriously jeopardizing the Nats' chances of finishing in the first division by ordering Bucky Harris to pitch the rookie, but 24,000 folks apparently were pleased by the idea. They went to the ball game.

* * * *

Griffith, himself, admitted it was all a show. "But, at least, it won't be just another ball game," he said. "If I didn't think the fans would like it, I wouldn't put it on. I always want to give 'em what they'll like, and I had an idea they'd like this one."

* * * *

In his idea, Griffith was eminently correct. The 24,000 figuratively ate up the proceedings when young Jacobs trotted out there to the mound to pitch against the Cleveland strikeout king, whom he had been hero-worshipping no more than a year ago when Jacobs was a college kid down in Virginia.

* * * *

Washington took a lacing—a bad one, but it had the saving grace of not being just another ball game. The excitement was mildly terrific in those early innings when Jacobs was holding the famed Feller even in a scoreless duel, and the 24,000 even began to conjure visions that it could happen—that Jacobs could beat Feller.

* * * *

This department may be a sympathetic old soul, but it cannot view Griffith's circus stuff yesterday too harshly. The Washington club owner, keenly disappointed in the second division rating of a ball team for which he had high hopes at the begining of the campaign, is entitled to salvage from the shambles of the season a profitable Sunday or two.

* * * *

The Nats' owner, in point of wealth, is the poorest among American League club owners. It is at the gate that he must take in the dough with which to buy talent for his ball club. Other club owners have at their command unlimited checking accounts, but not Griffith. He must make the turnstiles click or one of these days the sheriff will step in and take charge of Mr. Griffith's ball team.

* * * *

* * * *

Thus the Nats owner is thrown back on his club resources, and lucky it has been for him that he has a sense of showmanship. Griffith's sideshows have made it possible in lean seasons for him to keep control of his ball teams.

* * * *

He was the only club owner in the league to recognize the value of clowning in baseball and for 14 years the team of Altrock and Schacht lured countless thousands into the Nats' coffers.

* * * *

Two years ago, when the Nats' attendance was counted in hundreds, not thousands, at the fag end of the season, Griffith whooped matters up by importing the Cuban, Bobby Estallella, and building him up to a tremendously colorful character on third base. On one Sunday that otherwise would have been a lean day at Griffith Stadium, Estallella drew 20,000 fans to the ball park.

* * * *

And the season before that, when the turnstiles needed priming and the Nats were far out of the race, Griffith came up with a bearded pitcher named Alton Benson, a graduate of the House of David team, and succeeded in capturing the fans' curiosity with Benson to such a degree that 20,000 paid their way into the stadium to see him pitch.

* * * *

And so, yesterday, it was Jacobs, the college kid, against Bob Feller. And 24,000 paid to see it. Griffith doesn't have to apologize, methinks. He ought to take a bow!

D. C. Golfer Has 2-Shot Advantage

Isaacs, McKenzie in Tie for Runner-Up Spot With 291 Cards.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A Staff Correspondent.

Old Point Comfort, Va., Aug. 1.—Walloping Leo Walper, clowned his way into the Middle Atlantic professional golfers championship here today by posting a pair of sub-par 70's over the Chamberlin Club course for a 72-hole total of 289, a shot over par and two ahead of the runners-up.

In second place was the third round pace-setter from across the bay, Jack Isaacs, who could do no wrong with the hometown galleries, and Roland Mackenzie, Congressional's pro who was betrayed by his putter and prevented from a comeback victory that was within his grasp as late as the sixty-ninth hole.

Whistling "When My Dream Ship Comes Home," all around the course for the two-day event, Leo changed the words to "I've Brought My Dream Boat Home" when his second shot hit the seventy-second green and assured his first important victory in his professional career. Three summers ago the driving range mentor from Bethesda was taking two and three up from his pro partners.

In a two-way tie for fourth place and splitting fourth and fifth money was cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam, and Ralph Beach, Suburban's pro who missed four putts of under a foot during the 72-hole play.

Errie Ball, the Englishman representing the Farmington Club was sixth, with Johnny Bass, a former pro here a seventh in place tie with Wiffy Cox, Kenwood. Bob Barnett was next and George Diffenbaugh, in a fine comeback after an initial 83 completed the prize winning list.

Walper was playing beautiful golf. Walper's first round yesterday was 77, followed by a pair of 36's for a 72 and a tie for sixth place last night.

Playing with Ball, Walper shot the tricky course in 16 pars and 2 birdies this morning, scoring the sub-par holes on the second and ninth with respective puts of 35 and 5 feet and scrambling to only one of the perfect figure holes, the tenth, where he trapped his second shot—77, 36s 72, 35, 5. He started with five straight pars on the final 18 holes but slipped on the sixth for his first bogey of the day. It took about 2 minutes to get that stroke back as he deuced the short seventh and was out in 34 after a birdie on the ninth. It was three birdies in four holes as Leo bagged another sub-par 4 on the tenth. Pars followed on the next three, but Leo bet a gallerite he'd birdie the fourteenth and he rammed in a 15-footer for the three to win the bet.

A trapped second shot nearly cost him a par on the long fifteenth, but he recovered nicely and, on the next hole played his first putt too cautiously and three-putted the green to lose another stroke to par.

Knowing Isaacs required fives on 16 and 17, Walper split the middle on the final holes from tee to pin for the $200 first prize money.

Isaacs was apparently the winner before Walper hit his birdie streak on the middle of the final round. The fair-haired Virginian was 34—37, 71 in the morning and out in even par in the afternoon. He drove the ditch on 16 to lose a stroke and blew his final chance by going too strong for a birdie on the semifinal hole and missing coming back for a 3-putt green.

Mackenzie played winning golf today but robbed is the word to describe the former Walker Cup star's putting breaks. Time after time his putts rimmed the cup for pars or birdies. He was a stroke behind Isaacs at lunch, was out in 37 to go 3 behind, but scored an eagle 3 on the tenth hole to get back in the running.

Roland was over par on 12 from the edge of the green and lost a valuable opportunity to pick up strokes on the long fifteenth when he reached the green for the second time in two days in a pair of shots only to again 3-putt.

Mackenzie needed a birdie on the final hole to beat Isaacs, the temporary leader, but knocked a tee shot out of bounds. He scored his par, however, via a 1-putt green.

Wiffy Cox, the half-way leader, was having trouble with tee shots and putter in the morning, and finished with a 78. A quartet of hooked tee shots cost the Kenwood mentor four strokes. In the afternoon he was 2 over par with a 74, including three 3-putt greens.

Spencer's odds dropped to 7 to 2 as the fourth round started after his morning round of 73 placed the Washington professional two strokes behind the pace-setting Isaacs. Cliff was out in 35 even par, and stayed on regulation figures until the short thirteenth hole cost him another four, his second of the day on the par 3 number.

Cliff finished with four more pars, but his total was three strokes too many, as was Beach. Ralph took six on the easy eighteenth hole in the morning, when a birdie would have put him in a tie for the lead. He was back in 71 in the afternoon, but it was not good enough.

Al Treder finished out of the money, but the morning round sensation, as he smashed the course record in the first nine with a 31, with four birdies and five pars. He finished with 70, and was 77 in the second round, to be a stroke out of the money.

Chisox Win Pair From The Macks

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 1.—An eleventh-inning home run by Dixie Walker and the pitching of Bill Dietrich and Vernon Kennedy brought the Chicago White Sox two victories over the Athletics today.

Walker's hit, one of seven, made off George Caster in the entire first game, provided the winning margin in a 4-3 decision. The other three Sox runs were unearned. The game was sent into extra innings when Pinch-Hitter Lynn Nelson hit a home run in the ninth.

Dietrich and Kennedy limited the Macks to four hits in capturing the nightcap, 5 to 3. Bob Johnson hit a homer with one on for the Athletics and Luke Appling got a four-bagger with none on base for Chicago.

Parks Singles Crown Taken by Ritzenberg

By Bob Garrison.

Slnder, 18-year-old Allie Ritzenberg, junior performer, starred in a double role yesterday, doing a tolerable job of detecting while winning the Public Park Tennis Singles championship of the District from iron-nerved Melvin Tarpley, late of Tampa, Fla., on the Rock Creek Park Courts, in four sets, 7—5, 6—4, 4—6, 6—0.

Besides succeeding his brother, Nathan, as the ruler of the Parks' clay courts, and establishing himself as champion, both singles and doubles (having won the doubles crown with another brother, Hy, Saturday), the sandy haired Unii versity of Maryland freshman netman, removed the cloak of mystery which has enveloped the former University of Miami performer since his climb from the rank of unseeded entries and revealed him as a player subject to a beating at the hands of a clever performer.

Allie was having one of those great days, scoring a total of 35 placements during the match. Except for his service, which failed him occasionally on double faults, he played fine tennis.

In winning the right to represent the District in the national tourney in Pittsburgh, August 16, Allie did not, however, ever bring his opponent out of his easy going, stoical disposition. Tarpley, whether winning or losing, has yet to display emotion when his game failed him.

The extent of departure from his "oh, well" attitude came in the final game of the second set when he thanked a linesman for not calling one of his baseline shots out after it had hit what appeared to be the precise spot that the previous "out" smash had found.

Effortless Tennis.

Possessor of the perfect tennis temperament and a creditable game as well, Tarpley had advanced to the final round and his match with Ritzenberg, seeded No. 2, by eliminating, among five competitors, Bill Contreras and Ray Stocklinski, both seeded, without ever giving the appearance of effort.

With Tarpley's game as much a mystery to him as to anyone of the largest gallery that has witnessed a match here this season, Allie started out to find just what had to be done before he could win. Concentration on his opponents game caused a momentary lapse in his game and consequently Allie dropped his first two services and would have fallen in the opening set had not he been able to counterbreak Tarpley's.

After games stood at 2-all as a result of their going against service, Allie held on his third service to take a 3—2 lead in games. Meanwhile he was discovering that his best bet of defeating the mysterious Mr. Tarpley, who is now employed by a local grocery concern, was to keep the ball close to the ground, out of reach of the 26-year-old Southerner's overhead smashes, and await errors.

Allie was playing clever tennis all the while he was diagnosing Tarpley's, and in the twelfth game when Allie held a 6—5 lead he broke Tarpley's by forcing him into 4 net errors, to win the set, 7—5. As well as capitalizing on the error, Allie scored placements often by sending Tarpley's chop shots past him when he ran to the net.

Allie Breaks.

In the second set, games went with service until the eighth when Allie broke service, aided by a double fault and two errors, to take a 5—3 lead. Mel, forcing Allie's forehand to give ground, came right back and broke Allie's before having his broken again to drop the set, 6—4.

Although he opened the third set with the best tennis displayed up to that time, Allie dropped the third set as Tarpley gave reason to wonder if he had been holding out for two sets, so consistant was his play near the close of that set. Aided by an accurate and powerful forehand and service, Allie held his own until the fifth game when he was broken. Tarpley, who had been hard pressed to hold his two previous services, being extended on each, was broken in turn by Allie, making it 3-all in games.

A double fault cost Allie his service in the next game and he was one game down, then two, when Mel held to make it 5-3, his favor. After Allie took advantage of four netted shots to win his service in the ninth game, Mel served a love game to win the set. Allie fell twice while attempting to retrieve placements, as Tarpley scored three in the last game.

A 5-minute intermission changed the game of both players. Ritzenberg, who appeared to have been pressing in the third set, came out fresh, and executed every stroke in his repertoire with perfection to win the set in 7 minutes at love.

He allowed Tarpley only 8 points in the set, scored six placements and was given 18 points on errors.

Tarpley, who had rallied beautifuly in the third set when the odds were greatly against him, appeared to have shot his bolt in that set, having nothing in the way of competition to offer the wiry Ritzenberg, and bowed as quickly as possible.

Bosox Take Opener, Tie Second, 2-2

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 1.—The Boston Red Sox today jumped into third place, ousting Detroit by beating the Tigers, 11 to 4, in the first game of a twin bill.

The second game was called because of the Massachusetts Sunday sports curfew law with the teams deadlocked, 2 to 2, at the end of the tenth inning.

By taking the opener, the Sox swept three from the Tigers, and extended their winning streak to five consecutive games.

Jack Wilson won his eleventh game of the season as his mates pounded Roxie Lawson and "Boots" Poffenberger for 12 hits. Detroit made seven hits, two of which were home runs, both coming in the fifth inning. Hank Greenberg poled out his twenty-fourth circuit clout and Chet Laabs blasted a homer into the centerfield bleachers a few minutes later for his seventh of the season.

New York, Aug. 1.—The Yankees walloped the St. Louis Browns 14 to 5 today in a battle of homers to take the current series two games to one.

Backing up the effective pitching of Spud Chandler, who made his first start since being recalled, murderers' row tagged three Brownie pitchers for 17 hits including Joe DiMaggio's thirty-first home run, Lou Gehrig's twenty-first, and Red Rolfe's fifth.

City League 'Underdogs' Nip Leaders

By Jack Munhall.

Every dog has his day, and yesterday was underdog day in the National City League as a couple of lesser-regarded nines reared up, snapped the heels and smote down two heavily favored leaders, dislodging them from the top rung.

In the first upset, George Deoudes, whose triumphal march through the land of the midgets had become a trifle monotonous, held its winning bone too close to the hungry jaws of Hilltop Market, and before the mistake could be rectified, the Celerymen had suffered their first loss in nine games, by the score of 8 to 4. Spano hurled a smart game for the winners. He was touched freely for 10 hits, but when the chips were down he was well nigh invincible. The defeat, coupled with Corr's victory over Police No. 4, elevated the Bicyclemen to first place.

Mike Shrugue blasted a prodigious home run in the last half of the tenth inning to score Bailey with the deciding run, as Dixie Pig defeated Gordon, 4 to 3, in a distinct upset which toppled the Cafeteriamen from the lead of unlimited. A. Shrugue did not officially receive credit for the circuit clout, because only one run was needed, but he could have circled the bases again. It was a tough loss for Willie and L. Silverman to stomach for the pair granted the winners but 6 hits. L. Silverman relieved Willie in the fourth inning and allowed only one hit until Shrugue teed off.

Heurich, Rose Win.

In other A games Heurich and Rose maintained their places at the top, the former defeating Union Printers, 8 to 6, and the latter gaining a forfeit from the disappearing Anacostia Motors.

Heurich, much improved over recent play, lashed out with a savage 20-hit attack to replace the printers who were fortunate indeed to come so close. Heurich was weak in the pincers and had a scare thrown into 'em when the docile Printers suddenly scored five runs in the seventh which forced a hasty retreat. Walter James and Artie Schrivener were wheeled in and the Printers were held in check.

Anacostia's forfeit automatically drops the team from the league for the rules specify that two forfeitures result in loss of franchise.

In the B section the co-leaders New Deal and Read kept pace. New Deal, with Herbie DeVers recording his ninth consecutive win, scuttled Georgetown, 6 to 3, as Donal Fones, George Coakley and DeVers, himself, provided the stick dynamite.

Boggs In Fine Form.

Read, behind beautiful four-hit pitching from Tommy (not Ernie) Boggs, defeated Joe Tucci, 6-1. The Pharmacists poled 15 hits with Clinton, Hebrew and Roche filling the most prescriptions for anemic averages.

Vic Brown's five-hit flinging resulted in the ascension of Corr over Deoudes. Brown fanned eight batters. Pearlman was the stick star.

In other games in the B section the Cardinals took some of the shine from Ross Jewelers sinking them 9-5 in a slugfest marked by 27 hits, 15 by the winners and 12 by the losers, and Star Radio is still looking for the 260th Coast Artillery, who must have gone to war—for they didn't show.

Among the juniors George's Radio and Police 5 set the stage for the championship game next week by defeating Police 4, and Nick Bombard, respectively, and Stewart Pharmacy pried a 7-4 decision from Wade.

Snead Shoots 283 to Capture St. Paul Open

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 1.—Young Sam Snead, the slammer from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., uncorked two potent samples of his winter form over the Keller course today, and collected the $1,200 victor's share of the eighth annual $5,000 St. Paul Open golf pot.

Snead, the sensational development in the way of young professional talent during the winter money tours, knocked out two exciting sub-par 71's in the long final 36-hole drive for a total of 283 strokes just to outfinish big Willie Goggin, of San Francisco, who had made his best showing in many tournaments. Goggin, ahead by one stroke at the 63-hole stage, sagged just enough on the final nine holes to be forced to settle for the $750 second prize.

The young West Virginian, who finished runnerup to Ralph Guldahl in the National Open title struggle at Oakland Hills in June, achieved his first major triumph since the winter season, 'only with the aid of two rousing comebacks. Starting out today with a 141 total behind him, he staggered through his first nine holes in 38 strokes, with a distressing 7 on the eighth, the main reason for his trouble.

Pirates Beat Bees, 8-4, by Timely Blows

Paul Waner and Handley Come Through With Sacks Loaded.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 1 (AP).—Timely hits by Paul Waner and Lee Handley with the bases loaded, coupled with Russ Bauers' relief pitching, gave the Pittsburgh Pirates an 8-4 victory over the Boston Bees today.

The game was tied at 4 all in the last half of the seventh when Paul Waner singled to center with three on. In the eighth the sacks were again loaded when Lee Handley doubled off the score board in left. Two runs came in one each of the hits.

Bauers relieved Red Lucas with one out in the fifth and allowed only two hits the rest of the game.

Al Todd's homer inside the park with one on after one run had scored gave Pittsburgh a three-run lead in the first.

Md. Veterans To Hold Rally At Hagerstown

Crowley, Eastern Leader, to Address Legion on Wednesday.

By the Associated Press.

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 1.—Jack Crowley, of Boston, vice commander of the Eastern district, American Legion, will be the principal speaker at the opening meeting of the Maryland State Legion convention here on Wednesday. Other speakers will include J. Bryan Hobbs, Baltimore, State commander, and Mrs. Helen Bamford, president of the Department Auxiliary.

A concert will be given by the Hagerstown Municipal Band and a reception by the Women's Auxiliary will follow at the Legion Home. C. L. Stine is chairman of the convention committee.

Business sessions in the Masonic Temple will begin Thursday morning. Thursday afternoon a picnic and aquatic contests will be held at the Municipal Swimming Pool. Legionnaires and members of the auxiliary will be guests of the city.

On Thursday at 6:30 p. m. a banquet will be held at Masonic Temple, followed by a dance.

Friday's program will include a business session in the morning, drum corps contests at the City Park in the afternoon and a parade at 7 o'clock in the evening. This will be followed by the "wreck" of the 40 and 8, playground of the legion, at the State armory. Degree work will be by the Latrobe (Pa) "wrecking crew."

Officers will be elected Saturday morning. Among those mentioned as candidates are Bruce Bair, Westminster; Joseph L. Ferri, Baltimore; Samuel J. Cohen, Hagerstown, and Arthur L. McGee, Crisfield. Visiting speakers will include Charles E. Booth, department commander of West Virginia; Walter J. Kress, department commander of Pennsylvania, and Herbert Bowers, department commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Maryland.

Six Children Injured In Fire in Picnic Bus

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 1 (AP).—Six colored children were slightly injured when a bus containing 30 Sunday school pupils caught fire while returning from a beach outing. The children were hurt as they rushed to escape from the bus through doors and windows. The fire was extinguished with slight damage.

600 Dance Masters Trip for Fun At Annual Pre-Convention Ball

Six hundred men and women who teach dancing for a living—members of the Dancing Masters of America—danced just for the fun of it last night in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel and apparently had the time of their lives.

The occasion was the president's reception and ball that always precedes an annual convention of the masters.

Not all those on the ballroom floor were masters. A number of guests had been invited, but onlookers had little trouble distinguishing the professionals from the others. Generally speaking, the professionals did not perspire so much.

Dean of Masters, 75.

The dean of the dancing masters, Fred (Daddy) Kehl, of Miami, was there, and in grand form. He is 75 and has been teaching for 58 years, but he glided over the floor like a swan over a pool.

Dan Quilty was there, too, a graceful figure for all of his 64 years. He is president of a dance college in Bridgeport, Conn., and numbers among his pupils Eleanor Powell, now the most famous of Hollywood tap dancers.

Quilty began teaching 42 years ago, when the schottische, the waltz, the two-step and the polka were the vogue. He has seen the turkey trot, the shimmy, the bunny hug, the Charleston and the black bottom come and go, and he can now do the Lindy hop with the rest of them.

"Dancing is much cleaner than it used to be in the early jazz period," Quilty said at the Mayflower last night. "All you see now is a little snuggling. When jazz came in, it was pretty bad and it hurt the profession a lot. I suppose the music was to blame; it seemed to bring out the worst in body expression.

Liquor Pains Quilty.

"I am talking about the time when the shimmy and the bunny-hug were all the rage. Nowadays dancing is 100 per cent better, more wholesome."

One thing that does pain Mr. Quilty, however, is the custom of mixing liquor with dancing. This, he says, is a hangover from the prohibition era, when young people began carrying flasks to dances.

"In the old days," he said, "a girl wouldn't think of drinking hard liquor at a dance, nor would she dance with a man whose breath smelled of liquor. As for a man who carried a bottle, why, he was looked upon as a bum.

"I don't want you to think I'm an old fogy. But the point I am trying to make is that dancing can be fun without liquor. I think our young people of today gradually will find this out. I think they're finding it out now. Things always seem to work out, don't you think?"

The convention of Dancing Masters of America will run throughout this week.

On the Air Today

Two WJSV features change time, effective today. "Myrt and Marge" will be presented at 9:15 a. m. daily, and Ted Malone's "Between the Bookends" will be heard at 1:45 p. m.

* * * *

The midday hours bring two features from overseas by short wave. At 11 a. m., the colorful scene at England's famed Brighton Bank Holiday is provided by WJSV. WRC, at 1:05, provides an hour of 'Don Giovanni" from the Salzburg Festival, with Elizabeth Rethberg and Ezio Pinza in stellar roles.

* * * *

Jerry Danzig will be in Santa Barbara, Calif., and Dave Driscoll at Newport, R. I., tonight at 7:30 but their "Let's Visit" program will be heard as usual from WOL. Clever telephone line switching is to add zest to their informal "Knock knock" half hour.

* * * *

Edward G. Robinson "goes Shakespeare," WJSV, at 8, as Petruchio in "The Taming of the Shrew," in the Columbia Shakespeare series. Frieda Inescourt is cast as Katherine. Director Morgan has found a capable Grumio in Andy Devine, last season stooge in the Jack Benny troupe.

* * * *

WMAL prsents the first production in the new Eugene O'Neill play cycle at 8:30, with Helen Hayes, Peggy Wood and Henry Hull in leading roles in "Beyond the Horizon." Other O'Neill plays will be presented successive Monday evenings.

Wild Life Exhibition Opens in Cumberland

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 1.—One of the top-ranking features of Cumberland's Sesquicentennial opened this afternoon, one week in advance of the celebration proper, is the wild life exhibit along the Potomac River near the Blue Bridge.

The exhibit, under the direction of J. Wesley Kelley, president of the Western Maryland Outdoor Life Federation, is housed in a specially constructed building and includes upland game such as raccoons, woodchucks, rabbits, gray and red foxes, gray and fox squirrels, owls, crows, pheasants, wild turkeys, grouse, chukars, quail and other animals native to this section.

RA Fires 3 Executives As Strike Lasts 5 Days

Elkins, W. Va., Aug. 1 (AP).—Three executives of the Tygart homesteaders, scene of the five-day-old homesteaders' strike, will be replaced this week.

Strikers and representatives of the Federal Resettlement Administration refused to comment on any possible connection between staff changes and the strike. Robert Z. Willson, spokesman for the strikers, who charges the administration with inefficiency and waste of money, commented: "They are taking all the good men away."

Utah Boy, 12, Killed By Escaping Bandit

Helper, Utah, Aug. 1 (AP).—A stray bullet fired by a fleeing two-gun bandit killed a sleeping 12-year-old boy early today. Nick Zoumadakis, 11, found the body of his brother, Tony, 12, in bed when he awoke. The bandit, who had taken $400 from Dick Martelle's cafe, fired five wild shots as Martelle chased him down a alley by the Zoumadakis home.

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 1 (U.P.).—Tobacco crops were damaged heavily today when a 20-minute hail storm, accompanied by strong winds, lashed this section.

Mass. Labor Men Ask A Shorter Work Week

Lowell, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—The executive council of the Massachusetts Federation of Labor tonight demanded a renewed struggle for a shorter work week as the key to "democratic freedom" and to the end of unemployment.

On the eve of the federation's fifty-second annual convention, the council also asked a reunited labor movement, saying "an army which fails to fighting in its own ranks will never be effective in destroying strikebreakers and open-shoppers."

Crisfield Man Drowns When He Falls Off Dock

Crisfield, Md., Aug. 1.—The body of Floyd Miles, 37, Crisfield truck driver, was recovered from the Crisfield harbor after he fell off a dock and drowned today.

Two colored men, Charles Chase and Albert Collins, found the body. Miles is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Miles.

115 Hobbses and Lewises Hold Reunion at Jessup Blair Park

The Hobbses and Lewises, 115 strong, held a reunion yesterday with fried chicken, watermelon, iced tea, sliced ham and potato chips in abundance, at the picnic grounds in Jessup Blair Park on Georgia avenue at the District line. Most of them live in Frederick and Montgomery counties, Md.

They made quite an aggregation, but still a third of the clan was missing. Lewis Hobbs, judge of the Orphans Court at Rockville, who combines both family names in one, told how the family was descended from French Huguenots who fled to Wales and thence to Virginia.

Robert and John Lewis were the first to come to America. They settled in the wilderness of Virginia during the 1700s, built their houses with portholes to shoot Indians, married into the wealthy Warner family of Virginia, and one, Fielding Lewis, married Betty Washington, sister of George, he related.

A goodly share of all the Lewises in America sprang from their stock, Lewis Hobbs believes. The Hobbs branch joined hands with the Lewises after the turn of the nineteenth century. Four generations of the local Lewises and Hobbses played indoor baseball and went home.

3 Are Killed, 13 Others Hurt In Traffic Toll

Mother of Policeman in Alexandria Killed in Collision.

The mother of an Alexandria policeman and two men were killed, and 13 more were injured in week-end traffic casualties.

Mrs. Mamie Brenner, mother of Desk Officer Robert Brenner, was killed near Fredericksburg, Va., when a tire blew out, throwing her car across the road into the path of an oncoming machine.

Wax Douglas, 23, colored, of Croome, Md., died instantly when his automobile skidded from the Crain Highway near Marlboro, Md., smashed through four guard posts, uprooted a tree and landed in a ditch. The car was cut in half.

The third fatality was that of an unidentified colored man who died in Casualty Hospital after being struck on the Baltimore boulevard near Bladensburg, Md.

Ashby Warren, a passanger in the rear seat of the car which Robert Brenner was driving near Fredericksburg, was in grave condition in Fredericksburg Hospital last night. The patrolman's father was not hurt, nor was Mrs. Warren seriously injured in the crash which took the life of Mrs. Brenner. Her home was in the 500 block of South Alfred street, Alexandria.

In a smashup at dawn yesterday, William Elroy suffered a fractured skull when the car in which he was riding collided with a machine driven by Alfred Simmons, on the Richmond highway, 4 miles south of Alexandria. Simmons' condition was serious.

In the same accident, George Carpenter, driver of the other car, and George Kearns, both of 1022 Eighth street northwest, suffered severe cuts, bruises and shock. Jack Nightingale, 18, Alexandria, received a fractured skull in the other car driven by Simmons.

Ernest Sanders, colored, 29, of 622 S street northwest, suffered cuts and possibly several fractured ribs in a collision at Sixth street and Rhode Island avenue northwest. He was treated at Freedmen's Hospital.

Two men, who declined hospital treatment, were struck by a hit-and-run driver while crossing Fifth street at Massachusetts avenue northwest. The men gave their names as William, 27, and Woodruff Dickson, 36, both of 460 H street northwest. They were cut slightly.

Francis J. Prestelle, 69, of 533 Fourth street southeast, was treated at Providence Hospital for minor lacerations after the automobile in which he was riding was in a collision at Seventh and I streets southwest.

Prestelle was a passenger in an automobile driven by Joseph M. France, 35, of 2022 North Capitol street. The other machine was driven by Jack M. Curtis, 29, of 5328 Fourth street northwest. Police made no arrests.

Bernard Bradley, 38, of 1124 K street northeast, walked into the side of an automobile on Fourteenth near Water street southwest, according to police.

The driver, a woman, stopped and asked Bradley if he had been hurt. Bradley said he was all right, and the woman drove on.

Three men were injured in a collision at Saratoga street and Philadelphia avenue in Takoma Park, Md., last night. John A. Perry, 707 Twenty-second street northwest, suffered cuts on the head; Ray Heiner, Takoma Park, fractured ribs, and Donald D. Wallace, 28, of 107 Baltimore street, Takoma Park, cuts. They were treated at Washington Sanitarium.

Isadore Zevin, 33, was brought to Casualty Hospital by the Marlboro rescue squad last night after a hit-and-run accident on Tulip Hill road, near Marlboro. He was admitted to the hospital with a fractured right arm, condition undetermined. A resident of Chicago, Zevin was staying at the Hotel Hamilton, Fourteenth and K streets northwest.

Wallace Blames 'Old Guard' for Defeat of Ever-Normal Granary Measure.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday blamed the "Old Guard" for sidetracking his ever-normal granary bill and expressed hope for passage in the next two weeks of his crop insurance measure.

"Attacks on the ever normal granary bill by the anti-New Deal 'Old Guard' resulted in the sidetracking of the measure," the Secretary said at Denver. "But we'll be back with it next year."

Expressing "keen disappointment" at the fate of his proposal, Wallace said President Roosevelt was one of the bill's staunchest supporters.

"When the 'Old Guard' Republicans and conservative Democrats return home and discover the sentiment of their constituency," Wallace said, "they will take another view."

Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, charged last night that private coin dealers are profiteering in Government coins through the issuance of commemorative coins for centennials and fairs.

Cochran characterized "the exploitation of the Nation's coinage system as a racket" and asked his fellow Congressmen to enact a bill he is sponsoring which would suspend all acts authorizing issuance of commemorative coins which were passed prior to the present session.

Already 81 bills are pending in the House or Senate for permission to mint special coins, Cochran said, and two have been approved.

To bolster his point that the commemorative coin issuance had become a "racket," Cochran cited the case of the half dollars issued in connection with the San Diego Exposition. Congress authorized 250,000 coins and the mint coined them. Apparently the market was overloaded because 180,000 were returned and a request made that they be minted with the following year's date. Of these 180,000 coins bearing the 1936 date, 150,000 were returned to the mint.

Thus, to sell 30,000 coins the mint had to make 330,000 pieces. The coins actually sold brought the Government $15,000, while the cost of minting the 330,000 pieces ran to $2,805, coinage of half dollars costing $8.50 per thousand.

The Federal Government will have to cut expenditures by from $1,600,000,000 to $3,200,000,000 a year before it can balance the budget and start reducing the record-breaking national debt, Director John C. Gebhart of the National Economy League estimated last night.

Gebhart, making public a survey of Federal finances covering what he described as the "seven lean years" of deficits, said that if the contingent, guaranteed debt of $4,718,000,000 were added to the direct debt of $36,425,000,000 on June 30, the national indebtedness would be found to have reached $41,143,000,000.

The survey claimed that since December 31, 1930, when the national debt stood at $16,026,000,000 Treasury receipts have totaled $23,602,000,000, while expenditures amounted to $45,854,000,000.

"During that period," Gebhart said, "we have spent about two dollars for every dollar taken in. We have increased the public debt until it is now 2¼ times as large as it was in 1930; it is $10,000,000,000 higher than the peak of the war debt."

A National Labor Relations Board representative headed last night for Harlan, Ky., to conduct a hearing on charges filed by the United Mine Workers' Union, that a Kentucky coal firm sponsored "strip-tease" dances to lure employes from union meetings.

Pershing Horses Parade in Show

Front Royal, Va., Aug. 1.—The parade of "The Royal Family," which never has been known anywhere else, Capt. Chester E. Sergeant said, was the feature of the exhibition and horse show of the Front Royal Remount Depot yesterday afternoon. The event was the parade of Lady Lou, a remount depot mare, and five of her colts, four of which are full brothers and sisters sired by Groucher, a depot stallion, now dead.

Almost equal in interest was the parade of "veterans," showing Jeff and Kidron mounts of Gen. John J Pershing, aged 28 and 27 years. The commander of the A. E. F. rode Kidron in the Paris victory parade, and Jeff, the gift of the American Legion, carried the general in the New York victory parade. Both horses are retired and living lives of ease at the remount depot.

The judges were Maj. Gen. Henry Gibbons, quartermaster general of the United States Army; Col. T. J. Johnson, of the Quartermaster Corps; Col. J. M. Wainwright, Third Cavalry, Fort Myer, and George Wallihan, Front Royal.

Five Ford Drug Stores Sign Union Contracts

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 1.—Five Ford's drug stores, four in Cumberland and one in Frostburg, signed a contract yesterday with Local 569, Bartenders and Culinary Workers, according to Samuel A. Graham, organizer. The Ford stores were the last to sign.

Committees representing the Baltimore & Ohio Y. M. C. A., the shop and road men of the railroad, the management of the "Y" and Charles M. Shriver, division superintendent, yesterday discussed the strike at the "Y" restaurant.
